Obituary

JOHN F. ELLIS

John Franklin Ellis, in his 50th year, passed away Sunday morning at his home, 14 Hamby avenue, Toronto, after less than a week's illness from pneumonia. On Christmas morning he had been out shoveling snow and contracted a cold. That afternoon he was forced to retire to bed, and by the following day pneumonia had developed, to which he rapidly succumbed. He was born in Madoc, Ont., a son of the late Alonzo Ellis, and came to Toronto 34 years ago, during the greater part of which time he pursued his trade of blacksmith. Surviving are his wife and three children, Herbert, overseas with a Toronto battery; Frank, in the Medical Health Department at the Toronto City Hall, and a daughter, Rita, at home.

Mrs. Wilson, of Coe Hill, visited her sister, Mrs. F. Westra at Mrs. R. Dafoe's last week.

Detlor

Nearly another year has passed a near milestone into eternity with a nearer milestone, and they are gone to eternal rest, for those there are no more pain, trouble, sorrow and raging decreases. To all those left we would wish a happy and prosperous New Year.

We regret to say that the influenza is not as we thought conquered. Mr. M. Smith is not improving very rapidly. We learn that at Mr. W. Hall's conditions are quite serious. A neighbor not far away is helping to do the farm work, a neighbor went into the house to help them in their need, and at last reports, she was ill making live of one household ill.

Mr. George McLean who has spent the past few years in the West arrived home in the week prior to Christmas week, and he, with his brother were visiting their sister, Mrs. Hall, and are two victims of the flu.

Mr. John Miller, after spending a few days with his brother, Will Miller, who was so badly injured by a C. N. R. derailment on December 7th, spent a few days at Detlor, his old home and among friends. At last reports Mr. Miller was not much improved.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Wannamaker and little Leland, of Hastings, spent Christmas with Mrs. Wannamaker's parents, Mr. and Mrs. G. B. Bishaw.

Mr. Arnold Bradshaw who sailed for England just two days before peace was declared was, at last accounts in North Wales, expecting to be sent on across to help with the work which is being done thereabouts.

Rev. Ferguson preached a nice Christmas sermon on Sunday last and will give a Memorial sermon for two young men of Turf, "who died that we might live", Mr. John Turf and Mr. Jimmie Anderson.

Mrs. Jackson spent Christmas with her daughter, Miss Jackson, who is in charge of L'Amable station, during Mr. and Mrs. Ricketts' absence on their holidays.

Next Monday is election day. There will likely be a few hot words spoken anyway. Appearances are, at times, that qualified men are scarce, to judge by the representatives presenting themselves to the public.

Bannockburn

There passed to his eternal rest on Christmas night, one of our highly respected friends, the person of Mr. John W. Reid who has resided here for the past five years. The early part of his life was spent on the farm with his father at Finton since coming here he was married to Miss Loretta Andrew, of this place. This is the second death in the family for, to add to the grief of his parents his younger brother, Bert paid the supreme sacrifice in Flanders in 1917.

The funeral of the late Mr. John Reid took place from his home on December 31st and was conducted by Rev. Merrick, of Queensbury, in the Anglican church at Bannockburn. Interment in Fox's cemetery. He leaves to mourn his less his wife and little daughter, Yenna, his father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Reid, of Finton, one sister, Mrs. Fred Sedore, of Actinolite and one brother, Frank, in the West.

Done with life's sorrows and struggles Angels are guarding his rest: The trials of life are forgotten, Safe in the home of the blest.

We are pleased to welcome home two of our brave heroes from France, Pte. Frank Chambers and Pte. Neil Andrew.

Kenneth Nicol made a flying trip to Madoc last week. Better take the little road next time at the start, eh K.I.

Miss Grace Harris and Miss M. Hunter, of Toronto, spent the Christmas vacation here.

Some of the boys from the bridge should take better care of their correspondence in the future.

Mr. Lemel McEwen is on the sick list.

Mr. Hugh McLeod, of Saskatchewan is spending the winter here.

Mrs. A. Bronson is on the sick list. Pte. Frank Chambers left on Monday for Amherst to see his mother.

Mr. Bill Andrew is spending his holidays at Camden East.

How does a Christmas in Tweed go, BRIP?

We expect to hear the hum of the saw mill next week.

Miss Annie White has resumed her duties as clerk in T. M. Nicol's store.

Miss Kemp and Miss Jessie McEwen spent Christmas with the former's sister, Mrs. S. L. McEwen.

Mr. Tom Winters, of Trenton, spent Sunday here.

Miss Hilda Browland is spending a few days the guest of Mrs. J. Andrews.

Pte. Sandy Andrews has arrived home from Toronto, where he got his discharge.

Miss Pearl Harris is on the sick list as the result of inoculation.

Mr. A. Wilson spent Saturday in Tweed.

Amill for production of potato flour is talked of for Fort Arthur. It is said the cost of constructing and equipping a mill would be about $100,000. Since the war Germany has almost a complete monopoly of this commodity, the United States has to get it from the far east. It has no potato flour mill.

The Secret of Lonesome Cove

By SAMUEL HOPKINS ADAMS

Copyright, 1932, by the Bobbs-Merrill Company

She came and went, but who she is or why she came or where she went I have no more idea than you have—perhaps not nearly so much.

"There you are wrong. I'm depending on you to tell me about her."

"Not if my life hung on it. And how could her being found drowned on the beach be connected with me?"

"I didn't say that she was found drowned on the beach."

"You did—no; pardon me; it was the messenger boy. But you said that her body was found in Lonesome Cove."

"That is quite a different matter."

"The wasn't drowned?"

"I should be very much surprised if the autopsy showed any water in the lungs."

"But the boy said that the body was washed to a grating, and there were chains on it—is that true?"

"It was washed to a grating and manacled."

"Manacled? What a ghastly mystery!" Sedgwick dropped his chin in meditation. "If she wasn't drowned then she was murdered and thrown overboard from a boat—is that it?"

Chester Kent smiled inscrutably. "Suppose you let me do the questioning a while. You can give no clue whatsoever to the identity of your yesterday's visitor?"

There was the slightest possible hesitation before the artist replied, "None at all."

"If I find it difficult to believe that what will the villagers think of it when Elder Dennett returns from Cadytown and tells his story, as he is sure to do?"

"Does Dennett know the woman?"

"No; but it isn't his fault that he doesn't. He did his best in the interviewing line when he met her on her way to your place."

"She wasn't on her way to my place," objected Sedgwick.

"Dennett got the notion that she was. He hid behind a bush and watched."

"Did he overhear our conversation?"

"He was too far away. He saw the attack on you. Now, just fit together these significant bits of fact. The body of a woman, dead by violence, is found on the beach not far from here. The last person, as far as is known, to have seen her alive is yourself. She called on you, and there was a colloquy, apparently vehement, between you, culminating in the assault upon you. She hurried away. One might well guess that later you followed her to her death."

"I did follow her," said Sedgwick in a low tone.

"For what purpose?"

"To find out who she was."

"Which you did not succeed in doing?"

"She was too quick for me. The blow of the rock had made me dizzy, and she got away among the tuckers."

"That's a pity. One more point of suspicion. Dennett, you say, saw your picture. The Rough Rider. He will tell every one about it, you may be sure."

"What of it?"

"The strange coincidence of the subject and the apparent manner of the unknown's death."

"People will hardly suspect that I killed her and set her drift for a model, I suppose," said the artist bitterly, "particularly as Dennett can tell them that the picture was finished before her death. I was sitting on my stool when the woman came down the road. I noticed her first when she stopped to look back, and her shrouded elegance of dress, expensive and fitting, attracted my closer attention. She was carrying a bundle wrapped in strong paper. It seemed to be heavy. When she came near I spoke to her."

"You spoke to her first?"

"Well, we spoke simultaneously. She asked me the time. She seemed anxious to know, in fact, I think she used the word 'exact,' the exact time," she said.

"Presumably she was on her way to an appointment, then?"

"Very likely. When I told her she seemed relieved, might even say relaxed. As if from the strain of nervous haste, you know."

"Good! And then?"

"She thanked me and asked if I were Mr. Sedgwick. I answered that I was and suggested that she make good by completing the introduction."

"She wasn't a woman of your own class, then?"

Sedgwick looked puzzled. "Well, no. I thought not then or I shouldn't have been so free and easy with her. For one thing, she was painted badly, and the perspiration running down her forehead, had made her a sight. Yet I don't know. Her voice was that of a cultivated person. Her manner was awkward and her dress weird, for the time of day, and then all that she said had the life of a person accustomed to some degree of consideration. That fact quite plainly, I felt too, some thing was wrong about her. Her eyes alone would have aroused suspicion."

They were peculiarly restless and brilliant.

"Insane?" questioned Kent.

"Not wholly sane, certainly. But it might have been drugs. That suggested itself to me."

"A possibility. Proceed."

"She asked what point of the beach had given the best view. 'Anywhere from the first rise on is good,' I said. 'It depends on what you wish to see.' My ship coming in," she said. 'It will be a fair view, then,' I told her. 'This is a coast of guardian reefs.' 'What difference?' she said, and then gave me another surprise, for she quoted:—

"And, though thy soul sail leagues and leagues beyond, Still, leagues beyond those leagues there is more sea."

"That's interesting," remarked Kent. "Casual female wayfarers aren't given to quoting 'The House of Life.'"

"Nor casual ships to visiting this part of the coast. However, there was no ship. I looked for myself when I was trying to find the woman later. What are you smiling at?"

"Nothing. I'm sorry I interrupted."

"She walked away from me a few paces, but turned and came back at once."

"I follow my star," she said, pointing to a planet that shone low over the sea. "Therein lies the only true happiness—to dare and to follow. Remember this meeting," she said in a tone of solemn command, "for it may mark an epoch in your life. Some day in the future I may send for you and recall today to your mind by what I have just said. In that day you will know the hidden things that are clear only to the chosen minds. Perhaps you will be the last person but one to see me as I now am."

Kent pulled nervously at the lobe of his ear. "Is it possible that she foresaw her death?" he murmured.

"It would look so, in the light of what has happened, wouldn't it? Yet there was an uncanny air of joyousness about her too."

"I don't like it," announced Kent. "I do not like it!"

By which he meant that he did not understand it. What Chester Kent does not understand, Chester Kent never will.

"Love affair, perhaps," suggested the artist. "A woman in love will take any risk of death. However," he added, rubbing his bruised head reminiscently, "she had a very practical bent for a romantic person. After her mysterious prophecy she started on. I called to her to come back or I would follow and make her explain herself."

"As to what?"

"Everything—her being there, her actions, her—her apparel, the jewelry, you know, and all that."

"You've said nothing about jewelry."

"Haven't I? Well, when she turned—"

"Just a moment. Was it the jewelry that you were going to speak of when you first accosted her?"

"Yes, it was. Some of it was very valuable, I judge. Wasn't it found on the body?"

"No."

"Not? Robbery, then, probably. Well, she came back at a stride. Her eyes were alive with anger. There came a torrent of words from her—strong words, too. Nothing of the well-bred woman left there. I insisted on knowing who she was. Before I could guard myself she had caught up a rock from the road and let me have it. I went over like a toad. When I got up she was well along toward the cliffs, and I never did find her trail in that mass of cypresses and tuckers."

"Show me your relative positions when she attacked you."

The artist placed Kent and moved off five paces. "About like that," he said.

"Did she throw overhand or underhand?"

"It was so quick I hardly know. But I should say a short overhead snip. It came hard enough."

"I do not like it at all," said Kent again.

"You say that no jewels were found on the body. Was there any other mark of identification?"

"If there was the sheriff got away with it before I saw it."

"How can you be sure, then, that the dead woman was my visitor?"

"Dennett mentioned a necklace. On the crushed flesh of the dead woman's neck there is the plain impress of a jewel setting. Now, come, Sedgwick."

The Artist Placed Kent and his ON Five Paces.

If I'm to help you in this you must help me. Had you ever seen that necklace before?"

"Yes," was the reply, given with obvious reluctance.

"Where?"

"On the neck of the girl of my picture."

Kent's fingers went to his ear, pulling at the lobe until that unoffending pendant stretched like rubber. "You're sure?" he asked.

"There couldn't be any mistake. The stones were matched rose topazes. You might find another like it in the whole country."

Kent whistled, soft and long. "I'm afraid, my boy," he said at length. "I'm very much afraid that you'll have to tell me the whole story of the romance of the pictured face, and this time without reservation."

"That's what I've been guarding against," retorted the other. "It isn't a thing that I can tell, man to man."

"Don't you understand? Or," he added savagely, "do you misunderstand?"

"No, I don't misunderstand," answered Kent very gently. "I know there are things that can't be spoken of because they are shameful, but because they are sacred. Yet I've got to know about her. Here, I have it. When I'm gone sit down and write it out for me, simply and fully, and send it to my hotel as soon as it is done. You can do that, can't you?"

"Yes, I can do that," decided Sedgwick after some consideration.

CHAPTER IV.

My Lady of Mystery.

Being a single autobiographical chapter from the life of Francis Sedgwick, with editorial comment by Professor Chester Kent.

DEAR KENT—Here goes! I met her first on June 22 at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. Some wonderful cloud effects after a hard rain had brought me out into the open. I had pitched my easel in the hollow on the Martindale road so as to get that clump of pine against the sky. There I sat working away with a will, when I heard the clanging of hoofs, and a horse with a girl in the saddle came whizzing round the turn almost upon me. Just there the rain had made a puddle of thick, sticky mud, and the mud pie variety. As the horse went by at full gallop a fine, fat mud pie rose, soared through the air and landed in the middle of my painting. I fairly yelped.

To get it all off was hopeless. However, I went at it and was cursing over the job when the rider came back.

"I heard you cry out," said a voice, very full and low. "Did I hurt you? I hope not."

"No," I said without looking up. "Small thanks to you that you didn't!"

My tone silenced her for a moment. Somehow, though, I got the feeling that she was amused more than abashed at my resentment. And her voice was suspiciously meek when she presently spoke again.

"You're an artist, aren't you?"

"No," I said, busily scraping away at my copperplate. "I'm an architect engaged in estimating the structural rule from a square window."

She laughed, but it was a nervous, nervous laugh. "I'm a student," she said. "I know I shouldn't be plunging around here in that reckless way. May I—I should like to—buy your picture?"

"You may not," I replied.

"That isn't quite fair, is it?" she asked. "If I have done damage I should be allowed to repair it."

"Repair?" said I. "How do you propose to do it? I suppose that you think a picture that can be bought for a hundred dollar bill can be painted with a hundred dollar bill."

"No, I'm not 'sat together a Philistine," she said, and I looked up at her for the first time. Her face—(Kilgus and comment by Kent. I know her face from the sketches. Why could he not have described the horse? However, there's one point clear: she is a woman of means.)

She said: "I don't wonder you're so busy. And I'm truly sorry. Is it quite ready?"

At that I corrected some blemish of manner. "Forgive a moment," I said, "I'm doing so much for people to keep him civilized. The artist's duty."

SOOTHING REMEDY

A Perfect Remedy for Distress

"I had an attack of distress, so bad, that I was unable to get to bed for four months. I had tried every first treatment I could find, but nothing helped me. I had a box of 'Soothing Remedy' sent me, and I used it, and I was cured. It is a wonderful remedy for all kinds of distress, and it is sold by all dealers at 50c. or sent on receipt of 5c. to the 'Soothing Remedy' Co., Ltd., 10, Abchurch Lane, London, E.C. 4, which will be glad to send you a box on receipt of 5c."

Chance settled that point for me. As she finished, she was arms. The girl had looked at the saddle had turned with her, barely time to twist her foot from the stirrup when the brute of a horse bolted. As it was, her snub bit of a wrench. She turned white and cried out a little. I went to her and she herself again.

"Kilgus has been acting in all day," she said. "I shall have to stay here. The horse is wild and a few days."

"Here, that isn't so," said I.

"You couldn't get near the horse, perhaps, if you and some other?"

"I can get some at my place," she gathered up my things. "Four horses headed that way. You'd better come along and rest there while Kilgus and I round up your mount."

(Comment by C. K. Here follow more tales, showing how young people unperceptibly and unconsciously meet an acquaintance, but not a word upon the vital point of how the horse seemed to have no whether he was ridden on or not.)

At the bangalore I called Kilgus. We set out with a supply of salt. I took a horse with me. I had a horse and black horse was very for a while before he succumbed to temptation. On my return I found my visitor in the studio. She had said that she knew a little about pictures. I knew more than a little, and I was in fact, and asked up to the point about them. I don't say this.

Had Piles For Ten Years

And Tried Nearly Everything except a Surgical Operation without Obtaining Relief — Now Complete Cure Was Effected.

These are reported here from a chronic sufferer, who has been cured of his piles after ten years of suffering. He writes: "I had suffered from piles for ten years, and I had tried nearly everything I could find, but nothing helped me. I had a box of 'Soothing Remedy' sent me, and I used it, and I was cured. PRICES of farm products have reached a high level. The farmer can take full advantage of this situation only by adding to his equipment of time and labor-saving machinery. Time and labor are money. When time and labor are saved, money is saved.

Time and labor-saving devices for working the land do not produce complete results in themselves. The farmer must have rapid and dependable means of placing his products on the market.

Do You Want Style?

There is no place in which the fashions are so promptly and correctly displayed, as in the advertising columns. The wholesale purveyors of fashionable goods keep their own buyers and agents in Paris, London, and Berlin, and pass on the information obtained to their customers, the merchants, who in turn keep their patrons properly informed through their advertisements. Even the latest fashion magazines are behind the advertising columns of the newspapers in displaying the most recent fads and fancies.

FRENCH GO BACK TO CANDLES

Scarcity of Materials Used for Lighting Has Led to Revival of an Ancient Art

While the war has wrecked some industries in France, it has at the same time created new ones and revived older crafts. An excellent and interesting example of the latter is the art of candlestick making, which has taken on a new lease of life. Even in some of the big towns there are houses which are not supplied with gas, where before the war petroleum or spirit was used for lighting purposes. Now that the use of these is restricted closely, recourse has to be made to the old-fashioned candle.

This is true in the country especially where candlesticks are in great demand, and every one is buying them according to his means or fancy. At first they were made of copper, but when that metal became scarce brass was employed. Some of the modern examples have several branches and are very artistic.

A domestic art metal worker at Aix, who has specialized in this kind of work, and has become quite a celebrity, has just constructed a series of tall iron candlesticks of very solid proportions, which can hold several candles. They have been critically inspected by art metal critics and are claimed to be true works of art, and to appeal to all lovers of ironwork.—Scientific American.

LONG FAMOUS IN HISTORY

Vicissitudes of Old City of Jerusalem May Be Said to Be Without a Parallel.

The capture of Jerusalem by English troops recalls the tragic and fascinating story of that day, which carries us back through the mist of ages to the days when the throne of David was established within its walls. From that date we pass to the glories of the temple built by Solomon, which for centuries was to stand as the center and pivot of the Jewish nation and faith. The time came, however, when her days were numbered, and the drama of Calvary was followed a few years later by the onslaught of Titus, the Roman emperor, who encompassed the city round on every side and leveled it to the ground.

Round its ruined walls Saracens and Crusader were to fight continuously for its possession, and Christian knights flowed from all lands to the rescue of the holy places, until in 1099 Godfrey de Bouillon defeated his enemies and was chosen as the first Christian king of Jerusalem.

LINGERIE ADORNED

"Frillery" Must Be Eliminated With Hand Painting Is a Growing Edict of India

Well, girls, you can't help wearing your own art, and the latest lingerie is coming, and it's so smart that what you will have is the fashion of the Steel City, with a dash of the blast, running groups that will save of your skirts? For it is said that lingerie that once presented will make the palmed apparel with many more noiselessly and without of contention, but with fervor. Old painting done to suit individual taste on the lingerie are among the best amusements. Each piece is to follow a master design, and sets will have their day about. Thus, a mosquito-net dress will at a spider web stocking most eminently in the shade. It is entirely out of business, and a close flock of victims appear before these of us who have type of countless possibilities as to some "sex" with startling background atmospheric tendencies. "Wasn't Crossing the Delaware," "Don't Listen to the Voices," "The Hunt of Waterloo" and examples shot-to-piece school may all be possessed to the new fid. The temperament may now take on a sense of life, in spite of the "fid" in favor of a tax on art ranging to 25 per cent. It may mount upon wings. It may run without wearing. It may—but what's the use? The fid is a positive boon to struggling artists from Maine to California, who producers have, since the war, to confront not only a sluggish but positively dead market. Let us rise in our places and give three cheers for the application of the painting to lingerie.—New York

Newly Installed Wireless Telegraph Plant Is the Most Powerful That Has Yet Been Built.

The announcement that Italy and the United States have recently connected by wireless telegraphy deserves more notice than it has received. This achievement probably makes a back number of the wireless station at Nauen, near Berlin, which has been so useful in many and which, when the war broke out, claimed to be the longest in the world, with an effective range of between 5,000 and 6,000 miles, the nearest point in Italy, the United States transatlantic station at Arlington, near Washington, less than 6,200 miles, and to an intelligible message across that distance might be more than Nauen could accomplish. The hostility between the two countries which carry wireless messages, and which is always even more dangerous long distances, at high latitudes than in those nearer the equator, and the power required to reach a given distance increases so rapidly towards the equator, that the shortest route between Rome and Arlington is for a good part of the way at least 800 miles nearer the equator than that between Nauen and the United States, which fact considerably adds to the achievement of the Italian and American experts.—London Chronicle.

Aluminum Tops

Just run over a list of your own friends. Would not everyone appreciate a pair of Automobile Skates? They are so called because they are made from aluminum tops and rubber wheels. The wheels are tempered hard as glass on the inside and take a very keen edge, but they are not brittle. By a special process, the hardening extends inward only a certain depth, leaving a tough "core," which renders the wheels practically unbreakable. These high grade skates are made in a range of models to suit every taste and every purpose.

The Dolly Varden Gown

By SUSAN CLAUGETT

(Copyright, 1918, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

In the attic Eleanor Brooke lived into the old horse-hair trunk that had once belonged to the great aunt after whom she was named. She was looking for and hoping to find something she could shape into a dress for the dance on the fourth. Whenever she was at a loss for ideas, Eleanor's trunk had been a veritable treasure trove, but so often had the girl gone through the contents she had small hope of finding anything that would be suitable for the party toward which she was looking forward with more than usual anticipation.

Aunt Eleanor's gowns were all of the heaviest brocades, velvets and satins, so stiff they would stand alone. She had never been staid in money, as her namesake frequently was, and rich dresses, with here and there a fine stain that had come from London and were of a bygone style, had lain for long in the horse-hair trunk under the eaves until young Eleanor one morning pulled it into the light. With little exclamations of pleasure she opened the carefully wrapped packages and found herself held to much that was totally unsuited to her youth and petite figure, even in a day when girls were gowned in costly stuff.

But when one loves dances and has not the wherewithal to buy vanities, the fact that material is unsuitable has little weight, and she always carried the day against her mother's more certain judgment of things fit and unfit. But if her gowns were not always what she should have worn, that fact was lost in the pleasure one found in looking at the animated face and the absolute joyousness of the girl herself. For this little story is of a time when girls, young girls, were not so sophisticated as at the present day and their pleasures, coming far apart, made them all the more desirable, simple though they usually were.

This dance had been heralded for weeks. General Washington had signified his intention to be present, pausing for a few hours in Upper Marlborough on his way to Annapolis. Naturally everyone was on the qui vive, and Eleanor Brooke forthwith went into the attic to search for a gown brave enough to do honor to the occasion.

She knew what she wanted and lovingly fingered the heavy brocade covered with pink roses and the under-skirt of pink satin that had long been her utmost desire. And more daring still was the wish to wear the gown just as it was, quaint in its looped-up overdress and wattleu plait.

She shook out the folds of satin and held it against her height. It was long, very long, for Great Aunt Eleanor had been a tall woman. But she had also been slight, and when later her namesake stood in her own room and twisted and turned before the mirror to get a glimpse of her back, she decided the only change needed was in length.

It was a lovely gown and she would have been a very indifferent girl if she had not been thrilled by the vision that appeared half shyly at her from the gilt-framed glass. It was the first time her face had impressed her and the daintily-colored oval with its shining eyes, framed in waving hair, made her wonder if it really was herself. Her color flamed at a deeper thought which she tried to hide from her consciousness, but it would obtrude, and at last she faced it. "Would he like it?" Even to herself she hesitated to call his name.

For before all others she wished to appear fair in his sight. She gave no thought to other guests who would come from Georgetown, Alexandria, Baltimore and Annapolis on horseback and in great coaches, drawn by four horses. Four horses were always used upon state occasions, and what more important event could there be than this ball, the first after the Declaration of Independence? There had been much ruin and the roads were deep, and the mails in and about Marlborough watched the clouds and prayed for a south wind that would dry the mud, while the young men of the county made the assembly room brave with flags and greenery.

Even with greatest interest Eleanor Brooke watched the clouds, for she lived a long way from Upper Marlborough and was to stay with her grandmother at "Croome" over the fourth, and for a little visit thereafter. There was the chance her father would think the mud too deep to drive from near Mattapony Landing, and Eleanor ever that thought occurred, for there was a sinking at her heart for fear she might lose the long-looked-for pleasure.

But the day of her expected visit rose clear and bright, and with her horse-hair trunk strapped tight on the rumble and Uncle Clem and Jake in front, she set out with her mother for "Croome."

It was a weary way through the mud and night had fallen before the carriage reached the drive at her grandmother's, but weariness was forgotten as she passed out at the brightly-lighted windows and recognized voices and faces as the large door was thrown open and a group of young people came out to greet her, for Eleanor was but one of a group of cousins gathered together for the Independence ball.

On the steps to the gray crowd

she spoke to the gay crowd down the carriage steps, Eleanor looked about, longing, yet afraid to meet the quizzical eyes of John Everfield, and her heart sank when she did not see him. The pleasure she anticipated turned to a dull ache and she twisted her face kerchief between her fingers as she leaned further forward hoping to gain a glimpse of him.

Then pride came to her aid. He had promised to be the first to meet her, and she must not let this crowd of cousins sense her disappointment. With a light laugh that well covered the ache at her heart, she accepted the extended hand of Allan Bowie and descended from the high carriage.

This was two days before the ball. "Isn't it too bad?" Ruth Worthington whispered to her that night, as they went up the stairs together. "Cousin John went John, Jr., to Baltimore upon affairs of importance. I think it a shame. He might have waited until after the ball. Although John told me nothing but death would keep him away, there is always the chance of something happening. But even if he does get back in time for the dance, he will miss the good time we are having, and Cousin John was certainly meant to choose this opportunity for pressing business."

Eleanor's heavy heart lightened after hearing this and she took her full share of the gaiety that filled every minute of the day and evening. Although no coquette, as were some of the other pretty cousins, time did not lie heavily upon her hands. Allan Bowie saw to that, and Alice Worthington. Both young men were bewitched, and between them she was kept fully occupied. The night of the dance, as she descended the stairs, brave in her Dolly Varden gown, no maid among them all was lovelier, and the two gallants, bearded, powdered and dressed in the height of fashionable attire, all but came to blows in their effort to win her favor.

But Eleanor minded not that. She accepted their admiration shyly, which was most becoming, but underneath her pleasure was the hope John Everfield would also find her good to look upon. Yet, when they left the house, early on account of the roads, he had not come, and there was a tiny misgiving lest he might not be in time to see her in the wonderful gown or to claim the minut he had begged for.

Ruth pinched her as she was about to step into the carriage, whispering, as she handed her a small package. "I wonder if you can guess what this is?" John Everfield's Toin brought it. I'm dying of curiosity. Slip back into the house and open it before grandmother comes. There's time," and giving the girl a push, Ruth stepped into her place and gave back its fat, as the two young men called for an explanation of Eleanor's sudden disappearance.

And in her room the girl was looking with fluctuating color upon a pearl-encircled miniature, while she opened with fingers that trembled the note twisted about the slender golden chain. There was only a line, but it made of life a beautiful thing. For it asked for that which she was glad to give.

Over and over she read the single line: "Dear, will you wear this for my sake?" John. Then she slipped it into the bosom of her dress. With beating fingers she clasped the chain about her neck, but overcome by modesty, not so flaunting her lover's miniature for curious eyes to look upon, she hid it among the ruffles of her gown and hastily ran down the stairs, a radiant thing that took away one's breath.

Measure after measure was danced before John Everfield appeared that night, and when he came, one arm was in a sling. "An accident," he told them lightly, as he made his way to Eleanor's side, where he stood so as to cut her off from the view of others. "Tom did not reach 'Croome' in time," he asked, leaning toward her. "Yes," answered breathlessly, "I wear it here."

"Not before them all?" The color came and went upon her face. "I could not with you not present. I had no courage."

"And now?" She drew the miniature from among her gown, letting it fall upon her breast. "It is different now. With you here no fear of what is said." "Then come." He extended his hand as the slow music of the minuet filled the room, and together they took their places in the sight of all, a man and a maid promised to each other.

Aesthetics and Health. "The connection between individual health and beauty, though seldom recognized in theory, is intimate in practice," says the New York Medical Journal. True, extravagant ideas of what is beautiful have caused much nuisance and harm in the way of absurd and unhealthy fashions of dress, but it is to the aesthetic instinct of people that we owe most of sanitary improvement. The removal of filth, so important to public health, and cleanliness in general, is due in a large part to a dislike for ugliness.

Medical science is coming more and more to the idea of enforcing sanitary measures by fostering a public sense of aesthetics. The Journal concludes with rare sense: "One of the chief means for the furthering of public health consists not so much in preaching the need of sanitary conditions as in awakening the sense of beauty."

Remarkable Fact of Memory. "Pa, I learned four new French words today." "Did you, my son? What were they?" "Grenade, village, envelope and le crocodile." "And what are they for, my son?" "The name of the French word for 'to be'."

Not the Same

Through a similarity in names a wrong impression has been created, which may cause a great deal of harm. A few days ago it was reported in many papers that the Montreal Herald had gone into liquidation. The news was true but the public should know that the paper in financial difficulties had no connection whatever with the great Weekly paper called The Family Herald and Weekly Star. The latter paper is published by The Montreal Star Publishing Co., and is known in almost every home in Canada. In justice to our readers we make this announcement. The Family Herald and Weekly Star is one of the strongest papers on the continent. The word "Family" should not be quoted when addressing that paper.

VERION OF COW.
Explanation of Apparent Stupidity of Animals When Approached.
When a cow faces an object both eyes may with ease be focused on it. When the object is at the side or near one eye may be focused on it, while the other is viewing objects in quite a different direction. Evidently the animal gives direct attention to one object with both eyes, or two objects with different eyes, or it may inhibit one eye and direct and concentrate attention with the other toward some object or fear or fancy. In advancing in a car toward cows standing in the roadway it will be noticed that those facing the car usually turn to one side and let the car pass; those with side toward the car will, if on, say, the right side of the road, run and attempt to cross to the left side; those with head away from the car will usually run down the roadway ahead, turning off at one side or the other.
The reason why the cow or chicken on the right side of the road turns to go over to the left, and vice versa, is, I suggest, because the eye of the animal, which sees and appreciates the danger of the advancing car, is by instinct kept on the dangerous object. To turn to the right and escape would blind the animal during the period of turning, and this she will not willingly do. But if she runs across the road in front of the car, the eye with which she first of all sees it will keep it clearly and continuously in view, and she thinks, allow her to escape the impending danger.
Even when safely across, if turned around by encountering a fence, or by chance, so as to perceive the enemy with the other eye, I have seen her run for dear life to recross the road to the side whence she has just come. The instinctive action, originally protective, is thus made a source of danger to the animal. The chicken, with monocular vision, labors under the same hallucination; it, too, thinks that the danger may be avoided by running with all its might, keeping the enemy all the time in view with the eye that was originally turned toward it. Thus, truly, the cow crossed the road because she crossed the road.

German People Guilty.
Why hold the Hohenzollerns responsible for all the devilry of Germany in this war? Why try to distinguish between the people of Germany and their Government? If it can be shown that their methods of warfare were just as inhuman before the existence of their present Government?
And it can be shown. "The very devils in hell are kinder to each other than you Germans are to your own peasantry!"—so said Gustavus Adolphus, the Swedish King. In the Thirty Years' War in a vain attempt to restrain their excesses. That war, which began in 1618, just 300 years ago, was fought in Middle Europe, mainly by Germans. It was organized brigandage on both sides, where non-combatants had no rights whatever. In a word, it was German warfare. The amelioration of warfare, which can be traced historically as far back as 2,500 years, presents two striking exceptions, namely, the Thirty Years' War and the present one. More than War and the present one. More than besieging Babylon, Cyrus, the Persian, sent this proposed agreement to his opponent: "Peace to those that are at peace, and war to those that are at war," and this guarantee was accepted and observed by both sides. Even the fanatical Saracens, who offered to the conquerors the choice of "tribute, the Koran or the sword," were far more merciful than the Germans in the Thirty Years' War. German savagery with all their pretensions to mastery research, have studiously avoided the field of international law. Search through the list of authorities on that subject and you will find not one name that is internationally accepted as an authority or ever has been. Again, when President Lincoln caused to be issued in 1863 the first manual ever formulated for the guidance of troops in hostile territory it was followed next year by France, Great Britain and others. But Germany intended gave notice that she had formulated a secret manual for the instruction of her army officers in occupied territory. Why she desired it to be secret we can now understand. Belgium and France can testify. Clearly the German race itself is, morally considered, one of the "backward races," and has been so for centuries, in spite of all the individual exceptions that may be mentioned. Germany as a unit must be held accountable for her misdeeds.

Church Union.
The incident happened "Some-where in France" on last Christmas. Says Interpreter Charles Welter, one of our soldiers who attended a midnight mass in a little Roman Catholic church persuaded the parish priest to let them sing in English during the service. Accordingly a chorus of five sang in that French church various Christmas hymns and "Nearer, My God, to Thee." It was a great success, the audience of five peasants showing appreciative and good intention. But something which nobody "over there" ever will know is that out of the five volunteer choristers two were Jews and three were Presbyterians.

Argentina Wants Fleet.
Argentina appears to be taking serious interest in accordance with formulated plans for the building of a modern fleet. As a preliminary step, President Rios has asked Congress for power to requisition materials of Argentina for the construction of a fleet. Furthermore, he would have the sale of Argentine vessels to other nations prohibited. Some concern is expressed in regard to fuel supply for the Argentine fleet. It is desirable in Buenos Aires to have the fleet based there, but the lack of coal in the port of Buenos Aires is a serious obstacle.

KULAK IN RURAL GERMANY.
Poor Glensmen Lashed When Caught on Rich Nobles' Estates.
Under the heading, "Culture Sketch from Pomerania," the Berlin Vorwarts recently reprinted the following advertisement from the Koenigs Zeitung of August 22:
"The women who were present when Herr von Schelling, Guden-hagen, whipped and intentionally ran down a young girl caught on a farm on Wednesday, Aug. 21, are asked to send their addresses to Friedrich Ruten, Gudenhagen."
On Aug. 27 the Volksstimme of Frankfurt reprinted under the heading, "An Idyl of Life on an Estate in Upper Silesia," the following extract from a private letter printed by the Schleswig-Holstein Zeitung:
"On a beautiful August day, we were wandering through the fields. To our left lay broad stretches of grain fields, to our right was a meadow, and back of that a field where the grain had been harvested. In order to prevent any kernel of grain from going to waste some seventy to eighty poor women and children were eagerly gleaning the ears left lie by the harvesters—a picturesque scene. Suddenly a wagon was driven up to the field, a man sprang out and, cursing and raging, approached the gleaners. The women and children scattered before him like a drove of sheep before a wolf. The younger and sprier ones escaped, the older and less active were halted by the man. He was evidently an inspector for the estate, and he cried, 'Shell out!' And the frightened women and children had to empty all the bags with the grain they had gathered with so much labor."
"When they didn't move quick enough he took a hard himself and ran from one to the other dragging the empty bags behind him. Stopping before one group of three or four women, the inspector not only snatched their bags of grain from them, but also laid his riding whip justly over the shoulders of these defenseless ones. Then he returned to his wagon, drove hastily to the nearby farmhouse and immediately sent out a wagon to bring the gleaned grain to the barns of the Saxo Count von Brühl, the owner of the estate upon which the incident occurred. The 'humane' inspector's name is Sick, the farm is in Gross-Vorbeck in the governmental district of Oppeln."
"One of the women who were whipped was an old mother, another was in an advanced state of pregnancy, her husband is lying out there in the trenches helping to defend the field of grain where his wife was lashed with a riding whip. A picture of rural conditions in Germany at the beginning of the fifth year that needs no comment whatever."

Is It Play-acting?
William II's histrionic gifts have never been denied, but if what is now going on in Germany is really stage-management for the delusion of the Allies, then the Kaiser will certainly go down as one of the greatest impostors in history. Only genius in the business of stage direction could set such elaborate machinery at work and could marshal such mobs with such elaborate and excruciating detail. The Liberal press attributes the Liberal-Lorraine shooting that never will they consent to put Danzig and Königsberg under the Polish eagle; the military critics deplore the Kaiser's reluctance to admit and admit that the invasion of Germany must be envisaged; the Kaiser is really intending to abdicate; and German opinion in the matter expressing a great yearning for a peaceful peace and admission to the League of Nations. Certainly an Emperor who stage a spectacle of his own throne tottering, his armies beaten, and his empire in dissolution, and then in a marvellous transformation scene can reveal himself as a conqueror and his country united, is a wonderful manager. Only his role is altogether too heroic for the average mind to grasp.

A New French Thinker.
"Lysis" has written a book, "Lysis" is starting a newspaper. Who is "Lysis"? Well, Lysis is "quelqu'un qui compte" in Paris these days. Those who read Gustave Herve's "La Victoire" know Lysis. He is a thinker, and a man who does not hesitate to do some plain speaking when he is necessary requires. It is Lysis of "La Victoire" who is about to start a paper of his own, with the title "La Democratie Nouvelle." It will be worth watching, and it would not be surprising if, watching it, one found oneself witnessing the budding and burgeoning of the new France that must evolve, if there is to be a France worthy of the French armies.

Overcame the Difficulty.
A little girl was sent by her mother to the grocer's with a bottle for a quart of vinegar. "But, mamma," said the little one, "I can't say that word."
"But you must try," said the mother. "For I must have vinegar, and there's no one else to feed."
So the little girl, with the bottle and as she reached the counter of the grocer she pulled the cork out of the bottle with a pop and said to the astonished shopman:
"There! Smell that, and give me a quart!"

France Needs Beef.
Since the outbreak of the war France has suffered a loss of 2,000,000 head of cattle. Moreover, the cattle have greatly lost in weight. Before the war the average weight in meat of slaughterhouse cattle was from 770 to 850 pounds, where to day it hardly exceeds 540 or 570 pounds. That is why France needs American beef, for it has not enough to feed its own soldiers and civilians, to say nothing of her men.

Price-Rises.
"You don't call that was a raise. Now you call it a mug." "I don't want to run the risk of being to pay a luxury on it."

Now She is Strong and Hearty
Philadelphia, Pa.—"I was overworked, run down, nervous, could not eat or sleep. I felt like crying all the time. I tried different remedies without benefit. The doctor said it was a wonder I was alive, and when Vinol was given me I began to improve. I have taken eight bottles and am now strong and perfectly healthy in every respect, and have gained in weight. I can not praise Vinol enough."—Mrs. Sarah A. Jones, 1025 Nevada St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Soldiers Home Coming Campaign War Work and After-War Work of the SALVATION ARMY
"FIRST TO SERVE—LAST TO APPEAL"
The Salvation Army has for 53 years been organized on a military basis—lured to hardship, sacrifice and service. It is always in action, day and night. It has maintained Military Huts, Hostels and Rest Rooms, providing food and rest for tens of thousands of soldiers each day. 1,200 uniformed workers and 45 ambulances have been in service at the front—in addition to taking care of the needs of soldiers' families here at home, assisting the widows and orphans, and relieving distress arising from the absence of the soldier head of the family.
Notwithstanding all the Government is planning to do, notwithstanding the pensions and the relief work of other organizations, hundreds of cases of urgent human need are constantly demanding the practical help the Salvation Army is trained and equipped to render.
The Salvation Army Million Dollar Fund
January 19th to 25th
While it could do so, the Salvation Army has carried on without any general appeal. Now the crisis is arising with the return of the 300,000 soldiers. The budget for essential work during the coming year has been prepared. A million dollars must be raised to continue the after-the-war activities, which include:
Hostels for Soldiers
Salvation Army Hostels are vitally necessary for the protection and comfort of the soldier at the many stopping places between France and his home here in Canada. These Hostels—military hostels—provide good food, clean beds, wholesome entertainment at a price the soldier can afford to pay. If the boys did not have a hostel to go to, WILKIE would they go?
Care of the Wives, Widows, Dependents and Orphans of Soldiers Scores and hundreds of cases could be cited where soldiers overseas have been comforted by the assurance that the Salvation Army has stepped in to relieve their families from dire need. As an instance, a mother with six children is located—no fuel, no food, freezing food and funds exhausted by sickness and other troubles. They are taken to Salvation Army Emergency Receiving House. Winter and 200,000 soldiers returning increase the demands on the Salvation Army, whose personal help alone is of avail. Consider, too, the vast and complex problems arising out of the care of soldiers' widows and orphans.
Keeping the Family Unit Intact
The women of the Salvation Army on their waiting rooms acquire a very special responsibility. In the discharged soldier's war as a wife, they must also be the wife and the mother. They must look after the children, wash and scrub. In these urgent need for food, fuel, clothes or medicine. They are equipped. It takes money, of course, but more knowledge is the saving spirit of service in which the work is done.
When the Soldier Needs a Friend
The Salvation Army Leslie provides the boys with coffee, the pie, the chocolate, the news, with the children and the spiritual comfort which the boys in Khaki need. Until the last home-bound soldier is re-established in civilian life with you not help the Salvation Army to combat the disorders and evils that beset his path?
The service of the Salvation Army, founded on sacrifice, demonstrates the true spirit of the Master. It is directed to the extension of the Kingdom of Christ. For two generations the Salvation Army has stood out and on for God.
It approaches practical problems in a practical way and achieves RESULTS. It co-operates with all—overlaps none. It recognizes neither color, race nor creed. It is always in action, day and night. No organization does greater work at less cost. To carry on its great work it must have financial help, and on its behalf members of the Dominion Government, business men and returned soldiers endorse this appeal for funds.

Ever hear of the war in Europe?—Its Advertised
It's advertised!—so is a successful business.
Business is thin skinned. She has to be invited to come—and encouraged to stay.
Right now she is unduly sensitive. So many people have deliberately shut their doors in her face—so many of our merchants have given her the icy stare and cold shoulder—that she is having some difficulty in finding a place to hang her hat.
Now then, isn't a fact that success breeds further success? Isn't it a fact that a diamond in a man's necktie instantly gives you the impression that his pocket is lined with real money?
Then—if Business is not roosting on your trade tree, whose fault is it? Are you using your part in cultivating her acquaintance—in making her welcome? Are you Advertising—not in little mealy-mouthed "I wish 'nobody-to-hold-my-trade' squibs, but in Broad, Glowing, Confidence-Oreating advertisements that show you have back-bone and the goods that know no setback?
If you are not doing this you have no cause to put up a howl if people do not buy. They naturally think you are having troubles of your own—and everybody flees trouble.
Get out into the highways and byways now—put your name where all the world can see it. Let them know you have faith in your town, your townsmen, your business. Advertise.
The result—You'll be grabbing off orders while your competitor is still trying to master up enough gumption to warm his cold feet.

Rumors

On New Year's day the home of Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm Bristol was the scene of a quiet but pretty wedding, when their daughter, Ruth, was united in matrimony to Mr. Henry Walker, of St. Catharines. The ceremony was conducted by Rev. H. L. Dougan, in the presence of the immediate relatives and friends. Charmingly attired in a navy blue travelling suit, the bride, who was given away by her father, entered the drawing room at eleven-thirty, to the strains of Mendelssohn's Wedding March played by Miss Gladys Aylesworth. The young couple were unattended. After partaking of a luncheon, the wedding party motored to Ivanhoe, where Mr. and Mrs. Walker took the train for Toronto and thence to their future home in St. Catharines. Their many Madoc friends join in wishing them a long and happy future.

WHEN PEACE RETURNS.

Premiers to Deal With Demobilization and Land Settlement.

The conference of Provincial Premiers which has been summoned is regarded as of the utmost importance. The Dominion Cabinet will discuss with the provincial representatives three vital questions all of which are more or less interwoven. They are:

1. Demobilization of troops and the best methods of handling the soldiers during the demobilization period which will cover a year to two years.
2. Land settlement and emigration policies.
3. The handing over of the national resources to the three Prairie Provinces.

The Government has already a committee at work here and in England on demobilization plans. These plans will be laid before the Provincial Premiers for their approval and suggestions.

A land settlement policy has already been worked out by the Cabinet, which provides for a plan of co-operation between the provinces of the Dominion. The details of the policy have not yet been announced but it is known that it provides for expropriation of vacant lands in the west, held by railways and private interests. The Dominion will lend its credit and the provinces will be responsible for carrying out the details. Hon. J. A. Calder who is particularly interested in the scheme recently toured the west and laid the plans before the four Western Governments. It is understood they were favorably inclined. The Eastern Premiers will discuss the whole question with Mr. Calder and other members of the Government at the coming conference.

The restoration of the national resources to the Prairie Provinces has been a political problem of importance for a number of years. The three Western Governments are all urging now that action be taken. It is understood that the Cabinet is favorable provided terms can be reached. The Western Provinces were given large subsidies in lieu of their lands, but it is understood they now want the subsidies maintained as well as the lands. This will mean a vigorous protest from the Eastern Provinces. The Maritime Provinces particularly object. They claim that they have no way they can expand territorially. They, as a part of the Dominion, are financially interested in the western lands and object to the lands going to the provinces unless they are reimbursed. They will, it is understood, ask for a large increased subsidy. This may prove the stumbling block in the working out of the plan.

Women as Aviators.

"Out of a thousand women who want to fly," says C. G. Gray, London aviation expert, "you might find one who has the right kind of nerve for flying. A great many women learned to fly before the war, but I never came across more than one who could really fly. She was a very exceptional woman altogether. In the United States Ruth Law was the first woman to fly from Chicago to New York. She came of an acrobatic family. Katherine Stinson, another American girl, nearly completed the same feat recently. But for one woman of this type you have thousands hysterically anxious to fly, and they would only break their necks as well as government property and be a general nuisance."

Airplane Mail Popular.

An average of 1,000 packets of mail are now being carried regularly every day between Vienna and Kiev by airplane. The distance between the two cities is 750 miles and the claim is made that this is the longest route now being operated in any part of the world. The trip takes from ten to twelve hours, compared to forty hours by train. It is made in four stages, the intermediate stops being Cracow, Lemberg and Proskurov.

Blew Up the Family Wash.

Down in Galveston recently an innocent looking chunk of iron propped a family boiler over the fire for the Monday wash. But there wasn't any washing that day. The prop proved to be a Civil War shell, vintage of 1863, and fulfilled its destiny by sending the boiler through the roof and shaking the surrounding territory.—Omaha Bee.

THE CITY OF NISH.

The Ancient Capital of Valiant Serbia Has Had Varied History.

Among Serbian cities the little town of Nish, which has been captured by the Serbians is only surpassed in strategic importance by the capital of the country, Belgrade. It lies at a point where several of the great highroads of the Balkan peninsula converge, and it is at Nish that the line for Salonika branches off from the main railway between Belgrade and Constantinople. Before the war it was the custom of the King and his court to spend three months of the year at the little city on the banks of the Nishava, and it was to Nish that the Serbian Government retired when Belgrade had been finally occupied in the autumn of 1915.

Like so many other towns in the Balkans, Nish is a place of very great antiquity. It was mentioned as an important place by Ptolemy of Alexandria, and it was under the walls of Nish, the Naissus of the Romans, in the year A. D. 269, that the great battle was fought in which the Emperor Claudius destroyed the army of the Goths. Some two hundred years later came the invasion of the Huns, and in the centuries that followed Nish shared to the full all the warfare which swept back and forth over the Balkans, until that final silence created by the Ottoman flood in the fifteenth century.

It was in 1375 that the Turks first captured Nish from the Serbians. In 1443 the allied armies of the Hungarians under Hunyady and the Serbians under George Brankovich retook it, but, twelve years later, it came under the Turkish dominion again and remained, for more than 300 years, one of the most important Turkish military stations on the road between Hungary and Constantinople.

Once a Turkish possession, Nish, like the surrounding country, experienced the full brunt of the well-nigh perennial state of war which existed between Turkey and Austria. It changed hands twice, but the Austrians could never hold it for long; and when the Serbians at the beginning of the nineteenth century, having successfully risen against their Ottoman oppressors and swept them from the country, made strong effort to capture Nish, they were repulsed with great loss. It was not until the Russo-Turkish war in 1877 that the city finally came into the hands of the Serbians. By the Treaty of Berlin in 1878 Serbia was confirmed in its possession.

To what extent the little town has suffered by the Austrian occupation, it is impossible to say. In the early days of the war, before the Austrians actually captured the city, its accommodation was sadly overtaxed by the tremendous influx from Belgrade. No less than 30,000 people fled before the Austrian advance and settled in Nish or its neighborhood. Fifty visitors would have severely overtaxed the hotel accommodations of the Nish of those days and the effect of an invasion of 30,000 may be better imagined than described. Speaking of his visit to the city at this time one writer says: "Having obtained excellent sleeping accommodations — on the floor of a friend's house — the writer went in search of sustenance at the several eating houses of the city. The hubbub emanating therefrom beggars description, and the memory of the repast is one which will never be obliterated. Several Austrian officers in multi were among the diners, and the whole atmosphere seemed almost 'Gibberish.' It rather reminded one in fact of that South American republic which had a notice on the doors of its jail: 'All prisoners not in by six o'clock will be locked out.'"

The Only Buddhist King.

In marked contrast to the late King, his father, who had three queens and 175 other wives, the present King of Siam is such a strict celibate that he will not have any women near him. This strange monarch is attended only by men and among the diners, and the whole atmosphere seemed almost 'Gibberish.' It rather reminded one in fact of that South American republic which had a notice on the doors of its jail: 'All prisoners not in by six o'clock will be locked out.'"

Every line in a newspaper costs the proprietor something. If it is for the benefit of the individual it should be paid for. If the grocer was asked to contribute groceries to one abundantly able to pay for them, he would refuse. The proprietor of a newspaper must pay for the free advertising if the beneficiary does not, and yet it is one of the hardest things to be learned by many, that a newspaper has space in its columns to rent, and must rent them to live. To give away rent for anything less than living rates is as for a landlord to furnish rent free.

Every line in a newspaper costs the proprietor something. If it is for the benefit of the individual it should be paid for. If the grocer was asked to contribute groceries to one abundantly able to pay for them, he would refuse. The proprietor of a newspaper must pay for the free advertising if the beneficiary does not, and yet it is one of the hardest things to be learned by many, that a newspaper has space in its columns to rent, and must rent them to live. To give away rent for anything less than living rates is as for a landlord to furnish rent free.

EXPLOITS OF OUR SOLDIERS.

Some Facts Concerning the War Records Office.

In the days when the war was raging and people in Canada were gasping to hear the accurate, considered story of the doings of the home battalions in the battle area, a man walked into the censor's office in London one evening and laid several columns of newspaper "copy" on the censor's desk. "I should like that stuff censored and despatched to-morrow morning," he said; and the censor opened his eyes in amazement. "It can't be done," he said. "We've got to have several days' notice of all that work." But it was done nevertheless. The visitor was Lord Beaverbrook (then Sir Max Aitken); and Canada was soon reading the news which made the British newspapers envious.

At that period the Canadian War Records Office was emerging from its infant stage. It is now growing lustily, but people in Canada may not fully realize yet the importance of its activities and its pioneer work in rescuing a mass of vital information for the future historian. Under Lord Beaverbrook's office is making history in more ways than one. Especially is this true of the Literary and Editorial Section—a newly-developed branch controlling the production and publication of all books and pamphlets dealing with Canada in the war.

The Editor-in-Chief of the section is Capt. Theodore Goodridge Roberts, the well-known Canadian writer, of the New Brunswick Regiment and late of Headquarters, Canadian Corps. Working under him is a staff of four privates, all members of the Canadian Overseas Forces and all former journalists and writers. Every member of the section has seen overseas service and has been invalided to England. Their names are:—J. H. Holland, late 24th Canadian Battalion; Robin Richardson, late P.C.L.I.; G. E. Hewitt, late 28th Canadian Battalion; Stuart Martin, late No. 5 Canadian General Hospital, Salonika. It is the expectation of the editor to be in a position to employ other writers as the work increases and develops. The work already produced, or in course of production, by the section is sufficient to show that the department is playing an important part in historical compilation.

A book of the deeds of the Canadian V.C.'s is now in the hands of the publishers and will shortly be on sale in Canada and the United Kingdom. Another dealing with the exploits which brought other honors and awards is to follow. A short history of every Canadian Battalion is also in course of preparation. Several of these books are already being published and will be on sale almost immediately. Historical summaries of each Canadian Brigade from the time of its organization to recent operations—as far as the censor will allow—have also been written. Most of these have been seen by the Department of Militia and Defence, Ottawa, and have already been published officially.

A book of "Battle Pieces"—short, tense, true stories of personal interest—taken from incidents of the war—is also being written. The work is intended to bring home to the reader the human fighting man; his deeds are stripped of cold official language and his actions, sufferings, triumphs, and heroism are shown to rival anything in fiction. A volume on the work of the Canadian hospitals in the Near East is also being prepared—the five Canadian hospitals which went out to Demnos, Mudros, Egypt and Salonika in the early days.

Besides all these the editor deals with the periodical publication of "Canada in Canada" and the "Canadian War Pictorial"—two productions illustrated by official photographs and pictures, the contributors being all well-known writers and artists. Major Charles G. D. Roberts, who is now busy with volume IV of "Canada in Flanders" is also attached to the department for the purpose of writing this special history of the Canadian troops at Vimy Ridge. He has access to all historical documents and is aided wherever necessary by the staff.

The profile of all these works go to swell the Canadian War Memorials Fund. Apart from the immediate value of the work of the editorial section, it is apparent that were it not for constant literary rescue work much valuable and important information would be overwhelmed in the rapid accumulation of battle incidents, all of which demand preservation. The doings of two years or more ago must be kept alive. The future historian cannot be expected to have the time to write all, nor to write with the "thrill" which comes to the men who know just what and how and when.

Cinderella's Diary
By HILDA MORRIS (Copyright, 1917, by The McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

The girl was very young and pretty, but she looked tired. John Arnold, sitting opposite her in the street car, noticed her closed eyes and general air of fatigue. She was eighteen or nineteen years old, he decided, or perhaps twenty. She had a lovely oval face, framed with waves of bright hair, and she looked like a lady, in spite of her rather shabby, inexpensive clothes.
There was something very attractive about her.

John did not realize that he was staring at the girl until she opened her eyes. She opened them suddenly, as if she had felt his gaze through her closed lids. And she looked directly at him. It was a very impersonal look, casual and a little questioning, perhaps, yet it did a very curious thing to John Arnold. It made him feel very young, or very happy, or very glad of something; he could not analyze the feeling exactly, but at least it was different from anything he had ever experienced before. Perhaps it was because the girl's eyes were so luminous a gray, and so deeply fringed with black. They were very unusual eyes.
They closed again, however, almost at once. It was as though she had given him a glimpse of something too precious to be wasted. The car jolted on and the girl still sat with her curling lashes resting on her pale cheek. She was evidently very tired.

"A schoolgirl, perhaps, or else she is taking a course in a business college," John decided, noting her pile of books.
"They work hard, too, those girls. She looks as if she needed country air and a good long rest."

The car emptied itself, street by street, until there were few people left besides John and the girl of the curling lashes. As a matter of fact John had passed his street, but for some reason he had forgotten to get off. The tired-looking girl still sat with her eyes closed, resting. But at length she roused herself with a start and got off hurriedly at a noisy street lined with high apartments. John could see her hastening along in the chill dusk, the collar of her thin coat held high about her throat.

It was not until they had gone on some distance that he noticed the book. It lay directly at his feet, a cloth covered "Record" such as people use in offices. It was one of those books the girl had carried. John had particularly noticed its businesslike appearance. He picked it up curiously, and opened to the front page. A school notebook, no doubt, or office accounts.
Perhaps it might contain the girl's address, so that he could return it.

The first page, however, dispelled this theory. Across it was printed, in a careful hand:
"Dorothy May Douglas. Her Diary."
Of course John Arnold should not have read the diary, yet its neat pages looked so alluring, and after all, he thought, it might contain the address.
She would want it returned; people do not like to lose such precious things as diaries. So that evening after dinner John settled down in his comfortable bachelor living room and carefully scanned the pages of the little book.

"Monday—A hard day at the office.
Miss Coleman is so difficult to please.
When I get to be head of an office
force I shall try to make them like me.
I'll be nice to girls that have headaches, and I'll never, never speak so sharply that I make them want to cry.
Oh, well, I hope I'll never be head of an office. I'd rather have a cottage with white muslin curtains and red geraniums in the window and keep a cat."

"Tuesday—Stupid day at the office.
But I saw the loveliest silk dress in a store window as I was coming home.
It was just exactly what I would choose, blue with gold embroidery. If I were Cinderella I'd write to my fairy godmother and tell her to bring me a dress just like that for the ball. Perhaps I am a sort of Cinderella, but there isn't any fairy godmother or any
prince."

"Wednesday—It was dreadfully cold
in the office today. Miss Coleman likes the cold. And now there isn't enough heat in my room tonight, either. I wish I were Cinderella; at least she had a fire to sit by."

In spite of the warnings of his conscience as a gentleman, John skinned other pages, all pathos with words details of work, wistful with girlish longings.

"I've written to a party," read the very last page of all. "A really truly party. It isn't a ball like Cinderella's, and no prince has invited me, but it will be a very grand affair. It's at
Mrs. Colton Curtis' house, a dance she is giving for her daughter. I don't know why she invited me. She and mother were school friends, but there are such miles between us now. Miles
of different circumstances, I mean!
I've never met the daughter, but I'm sure she wouldn't care for me. I'm not one of the well-dressed, expensive-looking girls whom she associates with.
And I haven't anything to wear. Girls can't go to parties in blue serge skirts
and shirtwaists. Whatever shall I do?"

John Arnold closed the book with a little sigh. Why should a girl like that,
eager and young and charming, have
to work and long for the shimmery things that other girls had, all the pink
and frivolous things that are the tral-ling dress of girlhood? This girl in particular.

Quite suddenly John's eyes fell on an envelope which had dropped from the little book.
"Miss Dorothy May Douglas, 354 Pleasant Avenue."
Cinderella's address! John looked at it, and abruptly the vague plan which he had been forming in his mind became a firm resolve. He would be the fairy godmother himself.

It happened that Mrs. Colton Curtis was John's aunt, and after much deliberation he decided to take her into his confidence. Mrs. Curtis was a lady with a love for whatever was unusual and romantic, so she delightedly
"cut" an appointment with her own modesty to spend the next morning shopping with her nephew. Her ideas were as lavish as the most exciting fairy godmother could have desired.
She bought filmy lingerie, silk hose, gold slippers that could be exchanged
if too large for Cinderella's fairy feet, and to crown all, a blue silk dress with gold embroidery. Her purchases were packed in a huge box and addressed to Miss Douglas, but inside John put the missing diary, and a mysterious card—
"To Cinderella From Her Fairy Godmother."

After the box had been sent John found himself in a flurry of impatience to see Cinderella again, at the party.
He wondered what she had thought when she received the box, how she would look in the new clothes.

She looked all that the fairy godmother or the prince could have desired. Her hair, seen without a hat, was as gold as the tiny slippers. The blue silk dress made her mysterious eyes look blue, too, and the pale oval of her face was rose with delight and happiness and wonder and a great many other pleasurable emotions.
Moreover, she danced well, John, who dined with her most of the evening, found himself unable to look at any other girls. When she was tired, he found a secluded nook in the conservatory and they sat together, a little silent now that they were for the first time alone.

"Do you know," Cinderella said abruptly, "I've seen you before."

"Have you? Where?"

"On the street car, one night. That was the night I lost my diary, too."

She was silent, her eyes fixed on the distant vista of the ballroom. John's pulses were jumping guiltily.

"Your diary?" he questioned.

"Yes. Someone found it and sent it back with—things. If it hadn't been for that I shouldn't be here now."

"No?"

"You see, I'm not really this—kind of a girl. I work in an office. And I shouldn't have had these clothes, only the person who found my diary must have felt sorry for me or something.
Anyway, she sent me things to wear to this party. Just like Cinderella and the fairy godmother. I wonder who it could have been."

John was silent.

"I'm telling you this," she went on,
"because I thought you might have noticed. Where there any old ladies near us in the car that day—nice, old motherly old ladies?"

He shook his head, and Cinderella sighed a little.

"It's almost twelve," she said. "I mustn't forget that I'm Cinderella and have to work tomorrow. I must go."

"Oh, no," he begged. "If you are Cinderella, with a fairy godmother, you must have a prince too. I wonder if—I could be the prince?"

"You?—Oh—"

"We'll have a house with white muslin curtains and red geraniums in the windows."

"How did you know about that?"
she cried, startled. "It couldn't have been you who found the diary."

"I didn't mean to tell, Cinderella.
You see, I'd so much rather be the prince."

"Oh, well," she said softly. "If you'd rather—I think I should like it best that way, too. I should think I was dreaming, but the clock struck twelve and my dress hasn't turned back to blue serge."

"It never shall," he promised.
"Never, never, never as long as you live! We'll go ahead and live the rest of Cinderella's story, the part that never was written, and it's going to be the very best part of all!"

MAKE CONCRETE TILE
Well Cured and Properly Made Cement Tile Equal to Clay.

Strangles, an infectious disease of Cattle, May Be Controlled—The Cause, Symptoms and Treatment of This Serious Disease.
(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

To make concrete tile altogether many things must be taken into consideration.
In the first place it is very necessary that the manufacturer have experience in the making of concrete tiles; besides, it is essential to have good strong machinery, a good quality of sand and gravel, or crushed rock, first-class cement, material and equipment thoroughly mixed, and a kiln where the tile may be steam cured.

Only strong, heavy and durable machinery should be used. With respect to material a good aggregate would be one part material, which would pass through a twenty-mesh sieve, and two parts, which would range from the previous size mentioned up to one-quarter inch stone.
Only good sharp material should be used—ones in which there is clay should be avoided. If this cannot be procured, sand washing machine will have to be added to the equipment of the plant.

Where a great many tile manufacturers make a mistake in the making of concrete tile is in the fact that they use too "lean" a mixture, that is not enough cement to the material.
The proper mixture for first-class tile is one part cement to 2½ parts of crushed material, and in no case should the mix be more lean than one to three of a total aggregate, sufficient water being added to the mixture to make a gum consistency.
When the tile are completed they should be placed in kilns where they may be steam cured and left there for a period of not less than 48 hours.

The kiln should be about six feet in height and of a width sufficient to allow the required number of trucks on which the tile have been placed to rest during the curing process.
The tile should be placed in the kiln not more than 1½ hours after it has been manufactured and kept there for 48 hours during the steaming process. After it has been cured it might be removed from the kiln and piled in the yard, and should have at least one week's hardening before being again disturbed.
However, the product of any tile plant is offered for sale samples should be tested either at the plant or sent to the Drainage Department at the O. A. C., Guelph, to be tested to see if it is of the proper strength. For Scott, B.S.A., Or A. College, Guelph.

Strangles—Its Cause and Cure.
Strangles, commonly called "Cott Distemper" is an infectious, febrile, eruptive disease peculiar to horses, especially to colts or quite young horses, but those of all ages are liable to suffer. One attack does not render an animal immune from a second, but there are few cases in which an animal suffers the second time.

The disease appears in two forms, known as (a) Regular Strangles,
(b) Irregular Strangles, often called "Bastard Strangles." As with all contagious or infectious diseases it is caused by a specific virus which is communicable from animal to animal by contact or surroundings, may be carried from a diseased to a healthy animal on the hands or clothes of the attendant, on pails, forks, harness, clothing, etc., and it is possible it may be carried considerable distances in the air.

Symptoms.—When the abscesses form in the space between the arms of the lower jaw (called the maxillary space) the general health is often so little affected that nothing wrong is suspected until the abscesses break, but in most cases there is a dulness, more or less loss of appetite, increase of temperature, nasal discharge, at first watery, but soon becoming purulent, cough, often difficulty in swallowing, etc., and it is possible it may be carried considerably in the neighborhood of the head, usually in the space already referred to in the throat or higher up, just posterior to the lower jaw. In severe cases the patient becomes unable to swallow, the cough becomes very painful and breathing more or less labored and difficult; and he usually stands with his nose protruded, facing a supply of fresh air if at liberty.

Treatment.—In mild cases good care and comfortable quarters are all that is needed, other than flushing out the cavities of the abscesses three times daily with a five per cent. solution of one of the coal tar antiseptics or carbolic acid. In more acute cases in addition to the above it is good practice to steam the nostrils occasionally by holding the patient's head in steam coming from a pot of boiling water, to which has been added a little carbolic acid. Feed and water out of a high manger, as he swallows with greater ease when head is elevated. Give the patient two to four drams of hypophosphite of soda (according to size) three times daily.
Keep his nostrils to the throat, lance abscesses as soon as ready and treat as above. Feed on soft, easily swallowed and easily digested food.
If he won't eat keep up his strength by giving new milk and cream (see with an oz. of sweet spirits of nitre several times daily. Do not attempt to drench him. Give the powders out of a spoon, placing them well back on the tongue. Give the liquids with a 2-oz. syringe. If there be danger of suffocation, and the animal cannot relieve it, a veterinarian should be sent for promptly. In cases of irregular strangles the same treatment, less the local attention to the throat abscesses, and all that an owner can do, and after all, that a veterinarian can do.

What pays your advertising

We all advertise.

A man advertises his character by his deeds, his wisdom by his words or by his silence. A merchant's store, stock and windows speak either well or ill of his business.

So when a man says "no, I do not advertise," he knows not what he says. What he really means is that he does not publish printed advertisements.

Some proclaim this as though it were a virtue—yet spend much effort and invest much money in advertising their business through mediums other than the printed word.

They handle goods fit for a king—yet hesitate to introduce
them to Brown or Robinson.

This is inconsistency.

The truth is, printed advertising is a vital force in EVERY business, just as is the "silent" advertising of a product's quality.

When you employ the Printed word as your solicitor in the Court of Public Opinion, you build good will for your product or service—a good will that results in profit.

If unrepresented at this court, your interests are as unprotected as though, when involved in a law suit you failed to "enter an appearance" and the case goes against you—by default.

So it is clear you pay for advertising—one way or the other.
If you pay it wages, it will work FOR YOU.

If you neglect its offers of service, it will work AGAINST YOU,
in just the measure of its employment by your competitors.

So you ARE paying for your advertising, either out of your profits or by your losses.

Drama and Comedy.
M. Sardou, the famous French dramatist, when once asked the difference between a drama and a comedy, said:
"The distinction is very simple. In a drama the plot turns on a murder;
in a comedy, on a marriage. The question is, in a comedy, whether the marriage will take place or not; and, in a drama, whether the murder will be accomplished. There will be a marriage, there will be a murder; this is the first act. There will be no marriage or no murder; this is the second act. A new incident happens, a new manner of killing or marrying; that is the third act. An obstacle arises which prevents the killing or marrying; that is the fourth act. In the fifth act the marriage or the murder is consummated or accomplished, because everything must have an end."

Always Removed the Water.
The discovery that the removal of water naturally present in foods would arrest decomposition was made many years ago. The ancient Indians and the savage tribes of Africa are known to have dried their surplus meat supplies so that they might not be in want when game was scarce or hunting difficult. Egyptian tradition called for the placing of food in the tombs alongside the dead, and it is said that dried hermits of grain more than 4,000 years old were discovered in the cave in one case, yet in good condition.

"Monday—A hard day at the office.
Miss Coleman is so difficult to please.
When I get to be head of an office
force I shall try to make them like me.
I'll be nice to girls that have headaches, and I'll never, never speak so sharply that I make them want to cry.
Oh, well, I hope I'll never be head of
an office. I'd rather have a cottage
with white muslin curtains and red ge-
raniums in the window and keep a cat."

"Tuesday—Stupid day at the office.
But I saw the loveliest silk dress in a
store window as I was coming home.
It was just exactly what I would choose, blue with gold embroidery. If I were Cinderella I'd write to my fairy
godmother and tell her to bring me a
dress just like that for the ball. Perhaps I am a sort of Cinderella, but
prince."

"Wednesday—It was dreadfully cold
in the office today. Miss Coleman likes
the cold. And now there isn't enough heat in my room tonight, either. I wish I were Cinderella; at least she
had a fire to sit by."

In spite of the warnings of his con-
science as a gentleman, John skinned
other pages, all pathos with words
details of work, wistful with girlish
longings.

"I've written to a party," read the
very last page of all. "A really truly
party. It isn't a ball like Cinderella's,
and no prince has invited me, but it will be a very grand affair. It's at
Mrs. Colton Curtis' house, a dance she
is giving for her daughter. I don't know why she invited me. She and
are such miles between us now. Miles
of different circumstances, I mean!
I've never met the daughter, but I'm
one of the well-dressed, expensive-looking girls whom she associates with.
And I haven't anything to wear. Girls
can't go to parties in blue serge skirts
and shirtwaists. Whatever shall I do?"

John Arnold closed the book with a
eager and young and charming, have
to work and long for the shimmery
things that other girls had, all the pink
and frivolous things that are the tral-
ling dress of girlhood? This girl in particular.

Quite suddenly John's eyes fell on

Saves Money For The Farmer

PRICES of farm products have reached a high level. The farmer can take full advantage of this situation only by adding to his equipment of time and labor-saving machinery. Time and labor are money. When time and labor are saved, money is saved.

Time and labor-saving devices for working the land do not produce complete results in themselves. The farmer must have rapid and dependable means of placing his products on the market.

The Ford One-Ton Truck will make trips to town so much more quickly than the horse that you will have many extra hours of time to devote to productive work. A large number of farmers have proven the Ford One-Ton Truck to be a time and money-saver—have you?

HOW ABOUT YOUR HANDS?

They Are Said to Indicate Your Character.

"He wrangled with my finger," said the rough hire of Bret Harte's immortal story, "The Luck of Roaring Camp," and, unable to withstand the appeal of helplessness to strength, the clinging baby fingers twined about the potent man's hand, "Kentuck" straightway adopted as his own the half-breed's position—baby that fate had thrown across his path.

Dr. Allan McLane Hamilton, in his recent book, "The Recollections of an Alienist," speaks of the great significance of the human hands and uses a photograph of the hands of Charles Dostoyevsky, taken at the insistence of a friend. Beautiful artistic hands that express the grace and kindness distinctive of that author.

M. d'Arpentigny, the French savant, states that the hands represent three types: "Those whose fingers have pointed tips are possessed of a rapid insight into things; are extra sensitive and pious and impulsive. To this class belong poets and artists. To the square tops belong scientific people; sensible, self-controlled characters; professional men. The spade-shaped tops—thick tips with little pads of flesh on each side of the nails—are materialistic, commercial, practical, with a higher appreciation of all that tends to bodily ease and comfort."

To many persons the hands are more expressive of emotion than the face. The welcoming hand stretched out in love, the appealing hand, the pleading hand, the withdrawn hand, the hand clasped in humility and submission.

All about us, on every hand, are those needing some assistance, perhaps trifling, perhaps great, over the rough places of life. Few of them can pay for this aid. It must be given freely, often given unasked. It may be they need your hand to safely cross the strip of ice upon the street. It may be they need the restraining hand of your prayers to guard them across the thin ice of temptation. Unless you be one of those stricken of God, your hand, lying so quietly upon your knee, has power in it. It may be a brawny fist that can sling a trunk to the top of an express wagon. It may be a shadow hand whose only strength lies in writing a signature to a check that will be honored in a bank. It may be a hand of soothing magnetic touch, or fingers that can fashion a baby's dainty christening robe, but it is your hand to use, so use it, with all the strength that in you lies, to help your fellow men. If its strength can stop a runaway horse, if the healing touch can ease pain, or the baptismal robe help to consecrate a life, you will have won man's gratitude and God's blessing. If you keep the wolf from some door, but feebly barricaded against want, the gift of an angel guarding the gates of heaven. Do not wait until people are so hard-pressed they reveal all their piteous needs to you—their heart needs, their soul needs, their material poverty. Anticipate something of their want with your love, your remembrance, with the strength of your hand, and the encouragement of your words. So that when, like that woman of eager, helpful hands, God's peace upon you falls, tearful eyes may bless you as one whose ready hands brought solace to them in ways that you remember not.—Baltimore Sun.

Don't Buy a Pig in a Bag.

When you send money to a mail order house, you "Buy a pig in a poke." You may not get what you send for, as you are always asked to make "A Second Choice." If goods are damaged in transit, there is trouble and at best, an irritating delay in getting matters straightened out. If your local merchant asked you to pay for an article before you ever saw it, what would you say? Yet that is what the mail order house insists upon. Read the advertisements, see what you are buying, and spend your money at home.

Service

The business man, lawyer, poet, priest or Printer who earnestly tries to serve his neighbors will earn both money and real happiness; but the man who works for money alone gets that and nothing more.

The printers in the Review office work for both money and happiness—the quality of printing that brings happiness to our customers and just a little money to ourselves.

Do You Want Style?

There is no place in which the fashions are so promptly and correctly displayed, as in the advertising columns. The wholesale purveyors of fashionable goods keep their own buyers and artists in Paris, London, and Berlin, and pass on the information obtained by their customers, the merchants; who in turn keep their patrons properly informed through their advertisements. Even the latest fashion magazines are behind the advertising columns of the newspapers in displaying the most recent fads and fancies.

If you wish to keep abreast of the times, follow the advertisements.

Strain of Flying.
Aero-neurosis is the name which is sometimes given to nervous troubles brought about by the strain of flying. It has been said that an airman's life consists of "long spells of intense fear." He has to endure intense cold, rain, wind, and fog, the nerve-racking noise of the engine, the anti-aircraft fire, and to loop, spin, dive, or sidestep, apparently out of control, to deceive an opponent. An interesting nerve test has been devised in France for selecting the best type of airman for fighting. Around his chest is a pneumograph, in his left hand a trembler, and around two fingers of his right hand a pneumatic "doigtier." Behind the candidate a revolver, shot is fired or a magnesium flare is set off, and a record of the effect on his nerves is obtained by means of stylus writing on a blackened revolving cylinder.

One of Uncle Sam's Boys

Although he had twice been unable to make his way through a steam-filled compartment, Walter D. McLean, a chief mechanic's mate, national naval volunteers, United States Navy, made a third go at it, and with success. In doing this he prevented a much more serious accident, and for his valor has been commended by the secretary of the navy. The engine room had been filled with live steam when the breaking of the Miller carried away the exhaust beam of the steering engine. At the first alarm McLean tried to enter the compartment where the steam was seeping, but it was not until he had made three trips down the ladder that he was successful in stopping the flow. McLean went into the navy April 8, 1917, entering the naval volunteers at Erie, Pa.

Here are two cans with glass covers intended to show contents. Unlike others, the inside of the bottom is covered with a fine mesh of wire, and the liquid inside is clear and bright. On the right is Campbell's Varnish Stain—clear and bright. On the left is a cheap imitation—cloudy and dull. You can see the difference in the glass covers.

CAMPBELL'S VARNISH STAIN

DISSOLVES GREASE SPOTS

There is no stain so stubborn as grease. It is the worst enemy a housewife has. Campbell's Varnish Stain is the only remedy for it. It dissolves grease spots on all surfaces, and leaves no mark. It is the only stain remover that is safe for all surfaces.

There are 12 colors: Natural wood color, light oak, dark oak, walnut, cherry, mahogany, maple, birch, pine, spruce, fir, and cedar.

Birds Helping in the War.

Over six million birds have been fighting day and night, summer and winter, to help the Allies win. Without the help of these feathered soldiers our fighting men would not have had sufficient food. Our Allies would have been facing starvation and we ourselves would have been little better off. The margin between sufficient food for absolute necessities and famine has been and still is uncomfortably narrow, hence the food restrictions with which we have all become so familiar. The margin is narrow, but it is sufficient. Have you ever realized that but for the birds the feathered soldiers, the margin might not, and probably would not, exist to-day? It is an indisputable fact. Had a great disaster destroyed all insect-eating and vermin-destrorying birds (two years, or even a year, ago, we would to-day be facing such a food shortage as in all probability would have meant the loss of the war. Even as it is the loss from insects and from such vermin as rats and mice totals a sum so vast as to be almost unbelievable. What it would be without the aid of birds in keeping the pests in check fairly staggers the imagination.—People's Home Journal.

What They Mean.

The seemingly meaningless figures on the lining of your shoes are entirely intelligible to the shoe clerk. They are in code, and the code is a tribute to human vanity. There are several codes, the most common of which is termed the western. For instance, 375 means 7 1/2 C. The first number, 3, indicates the width, 1 meaning A; 2, B; 3, C, etc. The second figure is the length. If a 5 appears after it, that adds a half-size. An O indicates a whole size; 6D, for instance, would be 45 1/2.

Sweet Odors.

Sweet odors are of three kinds—the floral, the aromatic and the balsamic. The first group includes all those derived from sweet smelling flowers and plants; the second, those derived from musk and resins; the third, those derived from leaves and gums. The otto, or essential oil of perfume, is obtained in three different ways—distillation, maceration and enfleurage.

Mr. E. McLaughlin, who purchased the Spencer Farm, near Wellington, in Prince Edward county, last spring, threshed 970 bushels of oats from 11 acres, a yield of over 88 bushels to the acre.

Headors Saved Grain.

Headors were used this season in Southern Alberta to save the wheat crop, with the result that the grain was cut on many fields where otherwise nothing would have been recovered.

The advantage of keeping one head of poultry is that the poultryman can market a sufficient number in eggs and stock.

PLEASANT WAY ALWAYS BEST

Nothing Ever Lost by Effort to Talk Sting Out of Request That Must Be Refused.

Do you know how to take the sting out of anything unpleasant you have to do? It is a good plan to learn how to do this.

She said she couldn't do it, but you know how Effie would say such a thing. She tries so hard to make everybody feel pleasant. Now, when I say so, people understand that I mean no harm.

Marcia looked as well pleased with herself as if she had announced a more amiable characteristic. She was a girl with a peculiarly blunt and uncompromising manner. If she refused a request, her refusal was as downright as a blow.

It was never softened by any little phrase suggesting regret. And Marcia was so well satisfied with herself that she felt something like contempt for the way Effie took the sting out of saying no, and made the people to whom she refused a favor as grateful as if she had granted it.

The girl who starts to go through life with her elbows out is going to find the road hard to travel. If she prides herself on being blunt and outspoken, she may need to use that as consolation for her sore heart many a time. It pays to make even a refusal pleasant. It pays to take out the sting whenever possible, and drop in the honey. One who starts out as Marcia did, priding herself on being blunt, and contemptuous of the little courtesies, is likely to come to old age frightened and embittered. Learn to be pleasant and take out the sting.—Exchange.

ADD COLOR TO THE GARDEN

Goldfinches, Always Attracted by Sunflowers, Make Beauty Spot Especially Attractive.

A very familiar bird in our gardens, especially when there are sunflowers growing there, is the beautiful little American goldfinch.

Their deep black wings and tail and little cap form a striking, though pleasing, contrast to their bright yellow bodies.

Because of their sweet, canary-like notes they are often called wild canaries.

They are very sociable little birds, being found usually in small flocks; they even build their nests in small communities.

When winter approaches the male changes his bright yellow coat for one of a soberer color closely resembling that of the female.

Numbers of them feed upon the sunflowers in my garden every year, and it is a pleasing sight to go in there and see their bright yellow bodies flashing in the sun.

They are hardy little fellows, spending the entire winter with us.—New York Sun.

Moving Pictures for the Home.

A comparatively inexpensive combination moving-picture camera and projector for amateur use is illustrated in Popular Mechanics Magazine. It bears about the same relation to the costly and heavy professional machines as a compact, light camera does to a cumbersome apparatus employed by portrait photographers. Exclusive of its tripod, the new movie camera weighs less than three and a half pounds. It uses standard film and is operated as easily as any simple "still" instrument. The capacity of its magazine, designed for daylight loading, is twenty feet, which, because eight instead of sixteen pictures are taken per second, records as much action as forty feet of film in a professional machine. Sharp, clear pictures capable of reasonable enlargement for "stills" are obtained. By changing the lens, attaching a light frame with reels of 200-foot capacity, and mounting a small, cylindrical lamphouse, the camera is converted into a projector.

Serbian Great Walkers.

All Serbian peasants are great walkers. A servant, given a short leave, will think nothing of footing it to his home, five and twenty miles off, and walking back after a short day spent with his family.

It is quite in the ordinary way of their business for both men and women to be two days on the road to market.

Owing to their remarkable marching powers Serbian troops are well liked and moved with surprising rapidity, in spite of the great lack of railway communication. And that they march light.

With little in the hand-bag that hangs at his belt the Serbian soldier is quite content if only he can roll himself a cigarette now and then and look forward perhaps to a bit of phocagat.

The F. C.—'Why, confused you, I'm buying them for my boy!'

Letters from Our Soldiers

The following letter was received by Edna Swayne, Ormsby, from Pte.
Lawrence Conlin:

Belgium, Dec. 1st, 1918
I received your most kind and welcome letter of September 10th and no doubt was glad to hear from you Edna and that you are all well and as this letter is the best and came through the great war O.K.

Well, it sure seems funny here to us now, you never hear a shot fired nor I have not seen a German in over six weeks. They have all departed back to their own country, what has been left of them and we have been following them and expect to be on the German border in two more days and if nothing happens we intend spending Christmas in Berlin.

Just imagine you see us marching through Germany, and I think we will be stopping over there for a while, and if another war doesn't break out we will be coming home, those that are left and thank the Lord for that, that there is a few of us to go back. I don't care how quick it comes as I am getting tired of it comes as two years it is quite sufficient for me out here.

I have just got back from Belfast, Ireland, after spending my fourteen days leave from here and was in Belfast the day the peace terms were signed and wasn't some place? I suppose you heard before this about Mack Pack getting wounded again.
It's a good job he didn't get it very bad as I was speaking to him the morning he was hit and I am sure he got just a slight wound in his right hand. Poor Mack, he got quite a shaking up the first time he was hit, yes and Mack was a corporal when he went away and he is now in some hospital over in England and recovering fine, so I believe. Did you know Dick Clarke, he was killed the same morning that Mack was wounded. Oh, it was some morning that, I tell you, Edna! There were some feathers flew for awhile, it didn't make any difference who got hurt.

Well, I think I will ring off for this time and get ready to go to the front as we have a long road ahead of us tomorrow.

So I will conclude for this time with best wishes to all for a Merry Xmas and a Happy New Year.

Mons Proclamation After its Recapture

The historic city of Mons gave a splendid welcome to Canadian troops when captured it just a few hours before the armistice was declared. The following proclamation was printed on broadsheets and posted throughout the city:

TO THE POPULATION OF MONS

After fifty one months of sufferings from the iniquitous, pitiless and insolent occupation by the German army, the city of Mons is at last liberated through the heroism of the British Army, which, at the moment of the armistice, took possession of the city. The armistice on the exact spot where, the 24 of August, 1914, it had its first contact with the enemy.

The Third Canadian Division, at the price of heavy sacrifices, entered into the price of heavy sacrifices, entered into the city at three o'clock this morning, thus avenging by a brilliant success, the retreat of 1914. Glory and gratitude to it!

The armistice is signed: the German army has capitulated; brutal force is annihilated; justice and right are triumphant. Belgium emerges magnified and fortified from the terrible ordeals it has gone through.

The population has borne with confidence and courage the sufferings of the occupation. We are convinced that amidst the joy of triumph, it will observe the dignity and measure it has always preserved.

We rely on everybody's goodwill so that order may be observed. We invite also the population to resume, as soon as possible, their work. The ruins inflicted by the war are great,
and co-operation from all endeavours and energies is necessary to heal up the wounds it has caused.

In this solemn hour our boundless gratitude is towards the Allied armies and, amongst them, in the bottom of our hearts, to our gallant Belgian army and to the king, its heroic leader.

Long live the King!
Long live the Belgium fatherland!

BUSINESS THAT OF WAR

Paris is Every Week of Life Have One Thought, to Defeat the Hated Enemy.

Paris one realized at last: the "business of war." It is a business, and every phase of life, from the most minute to the most important, is now a business, and the business of war is the business of competition, financial or otherwise, they go to a business of life which, writes William Beebe in Atlantic Monthly.

One man could show the same vigor and enthusiasm as do these Parisians.
For they had faced high adventure from the first, and at all, only in annual vacation. To myself, and to others whose life work carries them from the elements and the elements and the elements, was held no absolute city. (The writer is a famous man.) But think of the gunner, the traveling salesman for women's clothing, the stretcher bearer who is a footman in a department! Did the soldier whom I ever conceive that he would be returned from sausage-balcon duty because of unconquerable air sickness?
Think of the children in Paris old enough to talk and walk, who have never known a world free from universal war, and it will be easier to realize the daily, monthly, yearly labor and worry which have worn for them ruts deep into the life routine of emotions of this Latin people.

As a medical student loses all sensitiveness concerning the handling of human fingers and feet and hands, so participants in the war, without feeling really callous or insensitive, come to take danger, wounds, disability, as incidents, not fatalities.

One's geography of Paris would
and the city is bounded on the south by supply depots, on the west by airports, and on the east by the front. Its principal imports and exports are handbags, crapes, wooden legionnaires, its products are war read, war literature, faith and hope.

YOUR DESK MAHOAGNY?

More Than Fifty Different Woods Are Put on the Market and Sold Under That Name.

The name "mahogany" is applied generally to more than fifty different woods. Perhaps half the lumber sold under that name is not true mahogany, for the demand greatly exceeds the supply.

The tree is only native to the limited area between southern Florida and between South America. Nowhere else is it really flourish. But the public love mahogany. Women want it for furniture, business men prefer it for office fixtures, and both and mahogany are rivals in the affections of shipbuilders. Therefore substitutes flourish.

It is not surprising that the real mahogany is so expensive when it is learned that it takes from 100 to 150 years for a mahogany tree to reach merchantable size.

Most of the substitutes bear little resemblance to the genuine wood, but skillful finishing makes them very much alike. Experts can usually distinguish between them by the aid of an ordinary pocket lens.
The efforts of the superficial, however,
to judge the wood by its appearance, weight, grain and color often lead them astray.

Royal Academy Dean Is Eighty-Six.

James W. Lander, the landscape painter, who, between eighty-six, is still going strong and painting his lovely Surrey scenery as well as ever.

But there are others not far behind him in age who write "R. A." after their names. London answers says, G. A. Storey is eighty-four, G. D. Leech, eighty-three; W. F. Yeames the same age, the president himself (Sid Wardlaw Poynter), eighty-two, while William Richmond are far past three score and ten, and there are a dozen others ranging on that limit.

Intelligent Nantucket Dog.

Whenever the steamer Gay Head anchors her whistle at 6:15 mornings at Nantucket, Harrington, the town dog, runs down to the dock and aboard the boat, and then down into the dining saloon for his breakfast. He knows the sound of the Gay Head's whistle and never shows up on the three mornings when the Sankaty is at the dock. He knows the time so carefully that he always is through when the call comes to go ashore.

Young Women Shine Shoes.

A bootblackening establishment, owned and personally managed by a young woman, and conducted exclusively by young women, is the latest war novelty at Clarkburg, W. Va. Miss Helen Saunders, until recently connected with a restaurant, has bought a shoe-shining parlor and all the young men employed there have been replaced by young women. Young men of draft age were soon released for military service and the firm and industrial work.

What's the Use?

Full Brown, manager of a local picture house, got word the other day that his film, "Missing," scheduled for the week of June 22, was missing. When a boy came he was glad to get word that "Missing" had showed up and was no longer missing.

Freddy's Polish.

Freddy lives next-door to some newly landed Poles who had a boy his age.
One day Fred's mother heard him mumbling some unintelligible stuff to the foreign boy and said, "What on earth are you talking like that to that boy?"

ALWAYS NEED OF MOTHERS

How Women With Childless Homes
May Make Themselves Blessed and Find Happiness.

The proper care of a child is for the common good. It is a woman's task to rear the child. However good and well meaning, no man can bring that home sense to a child that its little heart yearns for. A ragged, dirty, poverty-stricken child is a blot upon humanity.
If the child comes into the world in an environment where squalor prevails it is a concern of the community, or should be, that a young life exists there and measures should be taken to improve the condition of the child.

The world has need of mothers. Women can never rise to more glorious heights than rise of motherhood. Modest Hansard-Jordan writes in Humanitarian.
In the wider sphere opening for women in the most important, the most consequential of all tasks that she may "turn her hand to," are the tasks that will bring about better housing, feeding, education and what influences may be brought to bear upon his young mind; how he grows to good citizenship, how he comes to recognize his duties and responsibilities to his fellow men. And if there is a childless home the woman cannot bring a greater blessing or a greater happiness to herself than by opening its doors—and at the same time her heart—to some child without a mother.

PERKINS AT IMPORTANT POST

Sergeant Major's Remark Must Have Made Him Realize Just What It Might Mean to Him.

Major Jackson tells of the visit of one of the generals to the trenches on the end of the British line.

The general, who was a great stickler for discipline, said to the last man on the left:

"Do you know, sir, that you're the most important soldier in the army?" Private Perkins murmured some modest rejoinder, but, as in duty bound, kept his eye glued to the periscope with his vista of No. Man's Land.

"Yes," resumed the general, "you're the last man in the last squad of the last platoon of the last company of the last battalion of the last regiment of the last brigade."

After this impressive announcement the general turned on his heel and departed. Then the sergeant major, led Private Perkins should be puffed up by the suddenly conferred importance, added:

"Yes, and if the army gets the command to form on the left you'll mark time for the rest of your bloody natural life!"

Sunday Battles in History.

Some of the fiercest engagements of the present war have been fought on Sunday, the so-called day of rest, for the German seems to like that day for a bombing raid on some defenseless town, as well as for some big operations at the front, possibly on account of the old adage about the better the day the better the deed.

The fiercest of the battles in the Wars of the Roses was actually fought on Palm Sunday, observes London Answers. This was the Battle of Towton in 1461, and ten years later the Battle of Barnet was fought on Easter Sunday. Ramillies was fought on Whitsunday, 1766.

Both Bull's Run and Shiloh, in the American Civil war, were fought on Sunday. It was on Sunday that Wellington issued that famous order, "Obedience and duty must be carried by assault this evening."

A glad Sunday for the British empire was that "loud Sabbath" when Wellington defeated Napoleon at Waterloo in the last attempt on the part of one man to dominate the world.

Only Partial Repentance.

Bobby accompanied his mother to the grocery and, unobserved, helped himself to a banana and was calmly eating it when discovered. His mother, greatly horrified, reprimanded him severely, and on the way home, meeting a policeman whom she knew, told him of Bobby's misdeed and asked what he usually did with boys that took bananas.

"If they are big boys I lock them up in jail, but if they are little I just take them home with me. But you don't take any more bananas, will you, Bobby?"

Bobby, thoroughly frightened, repentant, clinging to his mother's skirt, whispered to her: "No, me no take bananas; me take an apple next time."

Brave Rescue of Comrade.

Hearing a cry for help, James Robertson McGregor, fireman, third class, rushed to the training station at Ayr, R. L., jumped into the bay without waiting to remove his clothing, and, notwithstanding darkness and ice, succeeded in rescuing an apparently unconscious man who was in the water in a very precarious condition. McGregor has been in the service since last May, when he enlisted at Albany, N. Y.

SAVED BY MIRAGE

How British Army Escaped Defeat in Mesopotamia.

Turkish Commander Saw What He Believed Were Reinforcements Coming to Aid Enemy and Ordered Retreat.

We went on toward nowhere, intending to make a wide detour and come into old Basra city by the Zobet gate in the south wall, Eleanor F. Egan writes in the Saturday Evening Post.
There was no dust out there; only hard-packed sand, out of which the fierce hammering sun struck a myriad glinting, eye-searing sparks. But it was beautiful beyond words to describe. We spun along at fifty miles an hour with a cool, clean breeze in our faces. Then just over a slight rise in the sparkling plain I saw my first mirage. It was impossible to believe it was a mirage and not really the beautiful lake that it seemed—a lake dotted with wooded islands and fringed in places with deep green forests.

I have seen mirages in other deserts in other lands, but I have never seen anything like the Mesopotamian mirage. We drove straight on and it came so close that I was sure I could see a ripple on its surface. Then suddenly it went away off, and where it had been our skidproof tires were huming on the hard-packed sand and I saw that the wooded islands had been created out of nothing but patches of camel thorn and that the trees of the forests were tufts of dry grass not more than six inches high.

Off on the far horizon a camel caravan was swaying slowly along and the camels looked like some mammoth prehistoric beasts, while in another direction what we took to be camels turned out to be a string of distinctive donkeys under pack saddles laden with bales of the desert grass roots that the Arabs use for fuel.

The mirage has played an interesting part in the Mesopotamian campaigns. In some places it is practically continuous the year round, and it adds greatly to the difficulties of an army in action. It is seldom mistaken for anything but what it is, of course, but it does curious things to distance and to objects both animate and inanimate. Incidentally it renders the accurate adjustment of gun ranges almost altogether impossible.

One of the most curious incidents of the whole war happened in connection with a mirage and on the very spot over which I drove that first day in the desert.

The battle of Shaiba was one of the hardest-fought battles in the whole Mesopotamian campaign and victory for a while was anybody's. It was going very badly for the British, their losses being heavier than they could stand for long. And though the Turks were in overwhelmingly superior numbers it was going very badly for them as well. This the British officer commanding did not realize and he was just on the point of giving an order for retreatment—which would have been fatal to the British in Mesopotamia—when to his astonishment he discovered that the Turks were in full retreat! What a moment!

The desert was full of mirage and the Turkish commander—who really ought to have been more familiar with local phenomena—saw approaching from the southeast what looked to him like heavy reinforcements. It was nothing but a supply and ambulance train magnified and multiplied by the deceptive desert atmosphere. When he ordered an immediate retreat his already unnerved troops stampeded and his demoralized rear guard was hounded and harassed by great bands of nomad Arabs all the way to Khammisyeh, nearly ninety miles away.
He learned the truth a few days later and committed suicide!

Oliver Goldsmith Memorial.

At Auburn, County Athlone, Ireland, the poet's birthplace, a memorial is being erected to Oliver Goldsmith.
It will take the form of the restoration of the church where the poet's father ministered so many years. Oliver Goldsmith was born in 1728 at Ballymahon, County Longford, and two years later his father, Charles Goldsmith, became rector of Kilkenny West and settled in Lissoy, which is now known as Auburn. It is a village on the road between Athlone and Ballymahon. Auburn of Goldsmith's "Deserted Village" in some degree represents Lissoy, and the story of an old rectory by General Napier was probably in Goldsmith's mind when he wrote the poem, although it is intended to apply to England.

Died at Post of Duty.

During the storms the early part of the year, which marines say were the severest known on the coast, the United States navy suffered the loss of the big ocean-going tug Cherokee.
This vessel was manned entirely by members of the naval reserve. Caught in a terrific sea the tug foundered and was lost. It was at this time on an important duty for the Washington navy yard to get guns to an Atlantic fort. Among the men who met a heroic death at this time was a lieutenant (junior grade), E. D. Newell, U. S. N. R., commanding officer.

We MUST provide for the need of the Soldier and his family!

It is absolutely necessary to ensure certain safeguards and comforts to our boys over there and over here, so that they may be re-established in Canada, strong in body and soul, contented that we at home have stood by them to the finish.
What sacrifice can we make for the boys who were prepared to sacrifice everything for us?

What the Salvation Army Has Done

It has provided comforts for fighting men since the twelfth day of the War.
Hundreds of thousands of parcels of food and clothing for the boys.
Tens of thousands of beds in Hostels in daily use in France, England and Canada.
197 Huts for Soldiers.
1,200 uniformed workers.
45 ambulances.
Thousands of War widows cared for.
Looked after soldiers' families.
Labored for the Master.
Helped to preserve the home ties.
Given the MOTHER touch to lonely men.

What Remains to be Done

Keep the Hostels open and open more, so that every returning soldier can get a clean bed and wholesome meals at a price he can afford to pay.
Provide comforts and safeguards for our boys, advancing into Germany, as well as those coming home and needing a place to eat and sleep, in Halifax, St. John, Quebec, Montreal, Kingston, Toronto, London,
Chatham, Winnipeg or Vancouver.
Guide and assist soldiers' families, especially the widows and orphans.

January 19th to 25th

The Salvation Army is equipped and organized to take care of the soldiers' URGENT and PERSONAL needs—needs that are imperative. It has never made a general appeal for funds to carry on this work until now. Give and give liberally. If you are not certain that your contribution will be taken up by a canvasser, send it direct to the Hon. Treasurer, Sir Edmund Walker, Toronto—subscriptions will be acknowledged.

Ever hear of the war in Europe?—Its Advertised

It's advertised!—so is a successful business.
Business is thin skinned. She has to be invited to come—and encouraged to stay.
Right now she is unduly sensitive. So many people have deliberately shut their doors in her face—so many of our merchants have given her the icy stare and cold shoulder—that she is having some difficulty in finding a place to hang her hat.
Now then, isn't it a fact that success breeds further success? Isn't it a fact that a diamond in a man's necktie instantly gives you the impression that his pocket is lined with real money?
Then—if Business is not roosting on your trade tree, whose fault is it? Are you not doing your part in cultivating her acquaintance—in making her welcome? Are you Advertising—not in little mealy-mouthed "I wish to hold my trade" squibs, but in Broad, Glowing Confidence-Creating advertisements that show you have back-bone and the goods that know no setback?
If you are not doing this you have no cause to put up a howl if people do not buy. They naturally think you are having troubles of your own—and everybody flees trouble.
Get out into the highways and byways man—put your name where all the world can see it. Let them know you have faith in your town, your townsmen, your business. Advertise.
The result—You'll be grabbing off orders while your competitor is still trying to muster up enough gumption to warm his cold feet.

The Review

Job Department,

MADOC, ONT.

Let us figure on your requirements

We will make a suggestion which involves no method to prevent the appearance of the rich, and avert the consequent result of the difference between rich and poor. The suggestion consists of the entire clause of the money over the world, in order to give the struggle for existence a check, to make way with the difference of rich and poor, and thus to promote peace and equality in the public life of mankind. It is through the medium of the money that wealth is accumulated, and the accumulation entails the difference of rich and poor, with its resultant struggle for existence.

This state of things is most undesirable. The end of mankind is not to be proud of individual talent or ability, but to co-enjoy the peace in the world, just as in a family, and any cause which brings about any inequality in public life must be radically eliminated. It is for this reason that we dare to suggest the clause of the money to prevent the difference of rich and poor.

What crafty fellow ever introduced the money for us in human life? Of course, nationalization of various valuables, such as gold, silver, jewels, etc., shall be implied in the clause of the money and their ownership by individuals be prohibited. Such valuables retain their value only when they are used as a means of inequality, but will be nothing more than those pebbles on the road when equality is to be prevalent. They may have some value in giving us a good feeling on account of their elegance, then they may be used, under public ownership, for the decoration of shrines, temples, churches, halls and many other like buildings to the common pleasure of the public at large.

Most complicated troubles may arise from the adjustment of properties after the enforcement of the clause of the money. With the proposed suggestion mines, railroads, ships, electric and gas plants, waterworks, and many other properties essential to the common interest of a nation shall be transferred to the national ownership, not to say of the nationalization of land, and they shall be equally compensated for, as for the confiscation of money and several bonds, newly issued for the purpose, which should have the characteristic of temporary transitional means until an improved feature makes its appearance in a new society.

In other regard individuals may be permitted to retain their own property, personal and real, and maintain their professions or occupations. Transactions shall be carried on by the exchange of kind in kind, or barter. But as barter is too inconvenient to be enforced, a ticket system may be taken for the remedy of this defect. As has been stated, our ideal clause of the money does not admit any accumulation of wealth, and so the tickets shall be given each a certain period of time, say ten, twenty, thirty years or more, during which they can be in use, and after which their circulation ceases.

When this is accomplished, there can be no more complaints, no more dissatisfactions, no more misunderstandings, and no more misunderstandings, and the world will be reorganized into a paradise of peace.—Seijiro H. Washima in Dai Nippon.

Wood for Explosives.

South and East Africa wattlewood will probably be used in the near future as a factor for the manufacture of explosives. Until recently supplies of acetone, which is required in enormous quantities for the manufacture of propellant explosives, have been largely obtained from foreign countries, where cheap supplies of waste wood were available for destructive distillation for acetone production.

Since the outbreak of war this position has been radically altered, and acetone is now produced in England on a large scale by the distillation of wood. The question is also being taken up in other countries of the Empire—it is proposed, for instance, to erect a factory for this purpose in Natal, where wattlewood will be used as a raw material.

The possibility of similarly utilizing the wattlewood accumulated in connection with the wattlebark industry of the East Africa Protectorate is also under consideration, and at the Imperial Institute an exhaustive series of trial distillations with this wood, and also with olive wood from the same protectorate, used locally as fuel, has just been concluded.—Family Herald.

The annual meeting of the Madoc Soldiers' Welcome League will be held on Friday, January 17th, at 8 o'clock in Madoc Town Hall for Election of Officers for coming year, also to consider the question of "Memorial for our boys who have fallen on the field of battle." It will be the duty of every citizen of Madoc village and the surrounding townships to be present at the meeting and express their views. The ladies are invited to be present and take part in the meeting.

On Thursday, January 2nd, the congregation of St. John the Baptist was "At Home" to all the Madoc soldiers. Mr. and Mrs. Watson kindly gave their home for the evening. The Rev. and his wife received the guests. The short program consisting of songs, readings and short speeches, followed by dancing and games and supper made up an evening long to be remembered. Mr. Watson's speech was very much appreciated. "Ted" Naylor's impromptu address was very entertaining and instructive. Mr. Bowman's physical stunts were amazing.

Madoc Band

A few "old soaks" once started out with instruments of tin
To make a noise and draw a crowd
And pull some dollars in.
A bunch of married men were they
With captivating manners,
They played their best and tried to flirt
With Sue and Jane and Hanner.
They played the songs our mother's sang.
Their jokes were old and mossy.
But they were up-to-date enough
To flirt with Sal and Flossie.

Their poor old wives were left at home
To "keep the home fires burning."
And shoo the "chickens" off the lawn
And watch for their returning.

We hope they do not get the flu,
And fly away to glory.
We'd like to see them once again
And hear the same old story

Of how they all were single men
With such attractive faces
That all the girls both large and small
Were "hopeless, love-sick" cases.

Goodbye, old band, goodbye, old sports
Don't dream and talk of "chickens."
Your wives are sure to be awake
And then give you the dickens.

Reaching the People
A prominent, real estate dealer in Toronto says that he gets better and quicker results from the Classified Want Ads. than from any other kind of publicity.
He states that the results are out of proportion to the small expense involved.
There is a moral in that for you if you want to reach the people effectively.

She was in large measure still a mystery to him and so he was doubly pleased when she asked him to "come
to supper" in her small apartment
where Julius had been informed she shared quarters with that eminently successful novelist, Amy Nair. Julius was relieved to know that Amy was not to be present. The supper was set for eight o'clock so that both he and Ruth might dispose of their day's occupation before the little spread.

The apartment proved to be just a well furnished "studio," the details and fine points of which—the careful elimination of every accessory or ornament which was not intrinsically beautiful and the exquisite sublimation of tones to the decorative scheme of the whole interior—were the last word on Julius. But there was an air of repose and seclusion about the large room—apparently the living room, eating room and work room combined—that put Julius in an agreeable frame of mind. Ruth responded to his ring and explained that the "old mammy" who kept house for her and Amy Nair had prepared the spread and then departed.

"I thought we could be cozier if we were all alone in the place. Amy won't be back till all hours." Then as she led him into the studio
he got his first glimpse of her dress.
It was like nothing he had ever seen before—surely not like the dress in which he had first seen her. He could not object to it on the score of immodesty for the soft folds of fabric clung high at the throat and well down on her wrists. But—could it really be possible?—the ample folds of the skirt somehow fell down to her feet in two divisions and were caught at both ankles in a neat metallic an-klet. Even that was not immodest but rather more modest, Julius had to admit, than the street costume of most young women.

Ruth saw his scrutiny. "Oh, my dress," she said. "Isn't the color lovely? It's read batik—'from Ceylon.' Amy Nair got it for me. I am glad you like it—Amy Nair says—"

"But I'm not quite sure I do," stammered Julius, and then as Ruth stood off and pivoted on her oriental slipper for his full inspection he honestly admitted that it was extremely becoming—"only hardly conventional."

There was supper, and after supper Ruth carried off the supper tray and brought back the coffee in a Turkish brass outfit that even Julius was connoisseur enough to admire.
From the folds of her remarkable house gown Ruth drew out a little metal cigarette box and opening it deftly with one hand she held it out to her guest.

"There are several other sorts in the large jar on the table," she said.
"Personally, I don't care for Turkish."
Julius tried to conceal his surprise.
He had never even wondered whether or not Ruth smoked. Other girls with whom he was associated in his editing did, but even they had never received him alone in their own apartment and then proffered a complete assortment of cigarettes. He felt the suspicion of a frown involuntarily come over his forehead but he fought it back.

chanced into their heads—more as Julius had talked with some keenly clever, clean-minded young boy of his acquaintance; and as they talked Ruth smoked nonchalantly—not in the least languidly. At ten Julius rose to go. Somewhere in the back of his mind he recalled that he had read
that although women who live alone
may receive callers unchaperoned
these callers must never remain after
ten. Ruth urged him to stay—still as a young boy would have done when he had not had enough conversation,

"Amy Nair Says"

By JOAN MARSH
(Copyright, 1917, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Julius Bates couldn't quite decide to his own satisfaction whether it was because Ruth Claridge was such an unusually pretty girl or because she was such an amazingly clever illustrator that he was so completely fascinated by her, and that before she had been on the list of regular contributors to the small magazine of which he was editor for two weeks he had found pretext to take her to lunch on two or three times and once to the theatre. Perhaps it was neither her cleverness nor her pretiness entirely; but mingled with them her delightful naivety and lack of sophistication. For though Ruth had quite obviously "arrived" in her work the big, grimy city, lost very little of the refreshing candor and childlike enthusiasm that characterized her as a country-bred girl. (Surely she must have known that she was very pretty
—a girl like Ruth could not have lived alone in the city so long without having been rather wearied with reminders of the fact—yet when Julius had rather inebriated her with thought later, told her she was the prettiest girl he had ever known, she opened her perfectly frank blue eyes wide and said:
"I am glad you told me so. I like to be thought pretty and I am glad that you think so." Besides Ruth never flirted, and Julius was just at the old young age when he had convinced himself that flirting was a great waste of time.

She was in large measure still a mystery to him and so he was doubly
pleased when she asked him to "come
where Julius had been informed she
shared quarters with that eminently
successful novelist, Amy Nair. Julius
was relieved to know that Amy was

suspicion of a frown involuntarily
come over his forehead but he fought

They talked about everything that chanced into their heads—more as Julius had talked with some keenly
clever, clean-minded young boy of his acquaintance; and as they talked Ruth smoked nonchalantly—not in the least languidly. At ten Julius rose to
go. Somewhere in the back of his mind he recalled that he had read
that although women who live alone
may receive callers unchaperoned
these callers must never remain after
ten. Ruth urged him to stay—still as
a young boy would have done when
he had not had enough conversation, either that as a young woman withing still further to try her charms on a man whom she knows to be her admirer.

Julius was reluctant. "Don't you think I'd better," he said. "I mean wouldn't it be the conventional thing to do? If you had let the mammy stay in then we might have prolonged the party—but you are all alone—"

Ruth shot back a glance of indignation but mere of disappointment.
She told him she did not think the speech was worthy of him and Julius admitted that he had been rather clumsy.

"Amy Nair says that no really emancipated people give those foolish conventions a thought and she says that it is people who love them and who see evil in smoking and unusual but beautiful costumes who are really the immoral people. And she says that it is our duty—really our duty—to show people that morality and decency don't depend on a few stupid and antiquated conventions. Amy Nair is as virtuous as my own mother and yet she does things every day that would make people like you condemn her."

Julius tried to mumble something about the impossibility for a girl so pretty as Ruth was, to live with the freedom of a young bachelor and then Ruth went off again on a spirited defense of Amy Nair and her own position.
"That's just it. Women have to take their place in the world and work as hard as men. It's just a worn-out prejudice that makes you think that there are certain things a woman may do and certain things a man may do.
Why, Amy Nair says that if she had a son and he had a taste for dressmaking she'd make him a great dressmaker. Just to show people that the old ideas about special vocations for men and women are all poppycock and nonsense. I don't see why a man shouldn't do anything that will help him and surely I don't see why I shouldn't have as many privileges as you."

The conversation drifted back to less heated topics and an hour later when Julius finally left he was in a state of mental confusion. One thing he was sure of, however, and that was that he was completely in love with Ruth and that in spite of the fact that she hadn't yet begun to flirt with him.

Then Julius asked Ruth to supper in his rooms. In the interval they hadn't mentioned the subject of their heated discussion. And at half past seven Ruth found herself seated before Julius' cheerful open fireplace in his bachelor apartment—Julius himself in a daintily flowered dress-gown at the other side of the fender.
From the book pocket at the side of his chair he pulled out a ball of yarn and a half finished soldier's muffler and without comment began to knit—not at all easily but still in a measure effectively. Ruth's eyes opened wide.
"All of all things!" she exclaimed;
then as she met Julius' eyes she paused and changed the subject.
Presently Julius excused himself to get supper. He had left his man of gold, so he could give Ruth a sample of his cooking and after supper he donned an apron and cleared away the dishes and remained long enough in the kitchen to tell Ruth that he had been washing the dishes. He doctored that sort of thing, he told her.

At ten Ruth rose to go. "I've been awfully glad to have you here," he told her, making no move to go and don his coat and hat to see her home.
"It's so seldom one finds a girl that will come and spend an evening with a man like this. I hope you'll come often." Ruth paused and said goodnight and started out.

She asked Julius to call a taxi. She said she didn't like to go through the streets alone at that time, and Amy Nair says it is rather dangerous for a girl alone. But there were two tears in her eyes as she returned and Julius, with coat and hat on ready to follow her, was quick to see them.
He put a protecting arm around her shoulder as they started out together.

"I know you're just been teasing me
—I know you don't usually knit or wear a flowered dressing gown," she said. "And I didn't in the least want to come alone to see you, but I didn't want to refuse after all I'd said. Why have you been so unfair to me?"

"Because I was a little jealous," said Julius. "Jealous of Amy Nair.
She has taught you a good deal of good sense and some foolishness."
And before they had reached Amy Nair's studio that night Ruth, like the frank little girl that she was, had told Julius that she loved him and had consented to be his wife.

Marine Peculiarities.
There are two natural phenomena of quite regular recurrence which have given unique fame to the Japanese bay of Toyama. The lightning cuttlefish is a rather tiny species that emits a wonderful phosphorescence when aroused, and while the fish is not confined to the locality, it swarms along the coast in April and May. As the fishermen seek them with special nets the alarmed creatures glow with exceptional brilliance. The second phenomenon is the Shinkero or mirage. The mirage, seen along the shore, begins as a faint mist and then develops into a panorama of castles, bridges and marching men and horsemen.

"Relieving Our Minds."
What passes for reasoning on most occasions is a series of vocal sounds which serve to use a phrase at once popular and scientific—to "relieve our minds." Arguments employed in political addresses, sermons, and newspaper editorials are commonly little more than ejaculations, called forth by the approval of a group of hearers, or the disapproval of a group of hearers, in the Assembly.

FOOD FOR LAYING BIRDS

Most Economical Ration, in View of Conditions, Discussed.
Contagious Abortion Makes Necessary the Sale of Valuable Animals at a Sacrifice — The Disease, However, Will Yield to the Treatment as Explained.
(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

A PULLET requires more food than a hen, if it is intended that the pullet produce eggs.
A bird to lay well must have a surplus of food over and above body maintenance. The excess of food above body maintenance goes either towards growth, fat, or egg production.
Poultry feeds are divided into two classes: one, whole or cracked grain, commonly called scratch feed, and the other, ground grains, commonly called mash.

Scratch feeds are generally fed night and morning and are scattered in straw in order to induce the birds to scratch or take exercise. A mixture of two or more kinds of grain usually gives better results than one single grain, largely because individual birds' appetites vary from day to day. A good mixture for the winter months might contain as much as fifty per cent. of corn, either whole or cracked, and twenty-five per cent. of barley, largely because individual birds' appetites vary from day
to day. A good mixture for the winter months might contain as much
as fifty per cent. of corn, either
whole or cracked, and twenty-five per cent. of barley, ten per cent. of wheat screenings, and fifteen per cent. of good oats. If one was obliged to do so, almost any of the grains could be fed alone with the exception of oats. There is too much hull or husk on oats to use entirely as a single feed.

At present for a mash feed we are using the standard hog feed. If the ground grains are to be fed moist or mixed with cooked household refuse, then the mixture should be one that will mix to a crumbly state, but if fed dry in an open hopper the ab. is not so important.
The mash feed is the one where the animal meals are generally given.
The amounts vary from ten to twenty per cent. of the mixture. The animal meals used are commonly high grade tankage and beef scrap.
Where one has plenty of skim milk or buttermilk the other animal feeds are unnecessary. One can use green cut bone; cooked refuse meat, such as liver lights, beef heads, etc.

A very good mash can be made of one part each by measure of shorts, barley meal, and ground milk.
Corn meal could be used in the place of the barley meal. If it is one short of green feed or roots, it would be well to add one part of bran. Perhaps the simplest mash to feed from an open hopper is rolled or crushed oats. We have used this for a number of years with excellent results.
Laying hens require plenty of green feed. Cabbage is one of the best green feeds. Roots are very good, but clover leaves should be within reach as well as the roots.
Sprouted oats are used to a large extent on poultry farms. When the birds get accustomed to a green and succulent food it is generally wise to give them all they will eat. A portion of fifteen pullets will eat a head of cabbage almost every day or one hundred hens will eat a peck of sprouted oats day after day.

Grit and shell should always be within easy access.—Prof. W. R.
Graham, O. A. College, Guelph.

Abortion Should Not Be Neglected.
Some cases of abortion are the result of injury to the dam due to a nasty fall or bad kick. In such cases the trouble is not likely to spread to other members of the herd. With the majority of abortion cases, however, the trouble is due to an infectious disease which is very readily spread to other members of the herd.

The disease apparently is localized almost entirely to the uterus. Here an inflammation is produced, which may result in the expulsion of the foetus, dead or alive, at any period of gestation. In most cases of infectious abortion, however, the foetus is expelled dead. A frequent complication of such a case is the retention of the foetal membranes by the dam.
If these are not removed after a few hours, death from blood poisoning is almost sure to occur.

The bacilli which cause the disease are present in large numbers in the fluids, foetal membranes and foetus itself. Consequently, every care is necessary to prevent these from contaminating anything with which other stock is likely to come in contact, either directly or indirectly. All should be gathered up carefully and burned or else buried deeply in quick lime.
Then the hands and clothes of those in attendance should be thoroughly washed with a disinfectant, and a strong disinfectant used freely all around the stall, particularly on the floor.

The dam should be kept in a stall by herself, as there will be a fluid discharge from the vulva which may last for weeks. Disinfectants should be freely used in the stalls, and the external genitalia, thighs, tail and back of udder should be washed daily with a disinfectant solution. For this purpose a two-per cent. solution of lysol is strongly recommended.
Strict attention should be paid by the attendant to the thorough disinfection of his hands or other parts of his person or clothes after handling the patient.

The dam should not be bred again until some weeks after all discharge from the vulva has stopped.—Prof.
D. H. Jones, Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph.

What pays your advertising

We all advertise.

A man advertises his character by his deeds, his wisdom by his words or by his silence. A merchant's store, stock and windows speak either well or ill of his business.

So when a man says "no, I do not advertise," he knows not what he says. What he really means is that he does not publish printed advertisements.

Some proclaim this as though it were a virtue—yet spend
much effort and invest much money in advertising their business through mediums other than the printed word.

They handle goods fit for a king—yet hesitate to introduce
them to Brown or Robinson.

This is inconsistency.

The truth is, printed advertising is a vital force in EVERY
business, just as is the "silent" advertising of a product's quality.

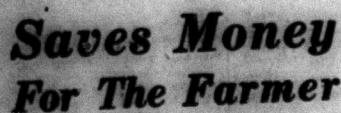

When you employ the Printed word as your solicitor in the Court of Public Opinion, you build good will for your product
or service—a good will that results in profit.

If unrepresented at this Court, your interests are as unprotected as though, when involved in a law suit you failed to "enter an appearance" and the case goes against you—by default.

So it is clear you pay for advertising—one way or the other.
If you pay it wages, it will WORK FOR YOU.

If you neglect its offers of service, it will work AGAINST you,
in just the measure of its employment by your competitors.

So you ARE paying for your advertising, either out of your
profits or by your losses.

PRICES of farm products have reached a high level. The farmer can take full advantage of this situation only by adding to his equipment of time and labor-saving machinery. Time and labor are money. When time and labor are saved, money is saved.

Time and labor-saving devices for working the land do not produce complete results in themselves. The farmer must have rapid and dependable means of placing his products on the market.

The Ford One-Ton Truck will make trips to town so much more quickly than the horse that you will have many extra hours of time to devote to productive work. A large number of farmers have proven the Ford One-Ton Truck to be a time and money-saver—have you?

thing New in Message Line.

While all unite in praise of Postmaster General Burleson in inaugurating an aerial mail service between New York and Washington, Americans should not make the mistake of crediting the present administration with the first aerial mail service between the two cities.

As a matter of fact, that honor falls to the administration of Thomas Jefferson more than a hundred years ago. It all attended the transmission of the deeds of the Louisiana purchase to France.

Mr. Jefferson, of course, was very anxious about the matter, and after the deeds had been sent from Washington to Paris, and the time had come when the vessel bearing the signed deeds back to this country—was due, Mr. Jefferson, unable to withhold impatience, sent some carrier pigeons to New York to be held until the vessel arrived and then released, bearing word of the fact of their arrival. This was done, and accordingly the first aerial mail service dates back not to this spring but to the year 1803.

Pockets for the Government.

Pockets for the Government.
The movement of the government toward a conservation of wool through the curtailment of masculine pockets should not be greatly disturbing. Economy and the trend of times now make many pockets as useless as the vermiform appendix.

Why should a man have five pockets in his trousers, six in his vest, and the same number in his coat? Legislation has put the pistol pocket out of business, and from southern states the duck has vanished.

Except for decorative purposes woman rarely has more than one pocket in her gown, and in most cases none. There are religious sects which abhor pockets and even buttons, yet they seem to prosper.

Three outside coat pockets is the number set forth in the new request, which is a very moderate demand. What we should all do is to help fill Uncle Sam's one big pocket so that he can wallop the kaiser in the quickest possible time.

Design Frustrated.

"Pardon me for referring to the matter, Githersby, but you borrowed $50 from me some time ago." "I did."

"By Jove, be so good."

"And I want to take this opportunity to tell you, Dubowitz, that I have remarked to I don't know how many of your friends and acquaintances that you were the biggest-hearted, most considerate fellow I ever knew—the kind of man who would let people owe him money for years rather than hurt their feelings by asking them for it. Fine day, isn't it?"

"Pretty fair. Guess I'll toddle along."

He Stayed at Home.

"Well—no," said the ancient Arkansaser. "I have never did much of that sort of thing. I was 57 years old, last year, born and raised right yin in Shagbark township, and hain't been outside of the county but once. That was when I was about thirty years. That was over to the north of the river, and they just naturally took and started to lynch me the minute I got to town, for something or nuther, I never did find out what. One foot was already in the air and the other barely touched the ground when a big fellow came running and hollered that they were making a mistake—I wasn't the guilty party at all. As soon as they turned me loose I lit out for home as the crow flies, and I hain't done traveling to speak of since. I always figured that the next occasion I'd find out that knowed it was a mistake might not get there in time to do me any good."

The Boxer Rising.

The Boxer rising was the movement of a Chinese society organized in 1900 directed again missionaries and other foreigners. The Manchus of the court and the empress at first opposed, but afterward encouraged the movement. This led to the murder of the German Minister at Peking, the destruction of several of the legations and the burning of about 200 refuges within the walls of the British Legation at Peking. A relief expedition of about 18,000 soldiers, made up of British, American, French, German, Russian and Japanese, went to the rescue, which was accomplished after heavy fighting.

Nemesis.

Nemesis. Nemesis was a goddess of justice and divine retribution. The word comes from a Greek verb meaning to deal out, distribute, dispense. In Greek mythology Nemesis was a goddess personifying allotment, or the divine distribution to every man of his precise share of fortune, good and bad. It was her special function to see that the proper proportion of individual prosperity was preserved, and that any one who became too prosperous or was too much up-lifted by his prosperity should be reduced or punished.

Her Master's Voice.

Head of the House—"Where are you going, my dear?"
His Better Half—"Where please."
Head of the House—"But when will you be back?"
His Better Half—"When I choose."
Head of the House—"Ah, yes! Of course! But not later. I could not permit that."

Ministerial Warriors

Probably no town in Maine has equaled Dexter as far as sending its ministers into war work is concerned. Four out of its six active pastors will have answered the call within a short time. They are Rev. Ambrose B. McAllister, Rev. George C. Sauer, Rev. H. Lincoln MacKenzie and Rev. Stanley Gates Spear.

It was because the following items appeared in his paper:

"Mrs. Thomas W. Johnson read an article for the women's club entitled 'Personal Hygiene.' Seventeen were present."

"Mr. John Crouse shipped a carload of hogs to Kansas City one day last week. Three of his neighbors went in with him to make up the load."

CHINA HAS PROBLEMS

STRUGGLES OF REPUBLICANISM IN FAR EAST.

New President, Hsu Shi-Chang, is Expected to Bring About Understanding Between Northern and Southern Chinese—He is a Civilian and Military Heroes Who Have Secured Power Were Chief Troublemakers.

THE new Chinese President, Hsu Shi-Chang, is the fourth to hold that title. Yuan Shi-Kai was the outstanding figure in Chinese affairs from the time of the Boxer rebellion till his death. His successor, Li Yuan-Hung, was the first great military leader in the rebellion which led to the establishment of the Chinese Republic, and though a liberal and enlightened man, showed the effects of having been trained in a military environment. When he resigned office in midsummer of last year he was followed by Vice-President Feng Kwo-Chang as acting President; he was a commander who fought at first with Yuan Shi-Kai against the south in revolt, and later threw in his fortunes with the Southerners against his old chief. It is Acting President Li who has just retired. The recent election is only the second of a formal character to take place in Peking. It was almost unanimous, and the opinion seems widespread that it was the best which the Northern Parliament could make. Whatever the new President's abilities, it is a relief to have the office in the hands of one not a military hero; while his election was apparently designed as the best attempt at placating the South, the Northern Parliament could make.

Above all else, China needs internal peace, which she has hardly had in the last decade. In 1911 fighting began to overthrow the Manchu throne. The new struggle commenced in 1912 was born of the fear of republicans that President Yuan Shi-Kai was making himself a virtual emperor—a fear well justified; and it continued with little cessation till in 1916 Yuan died just as the great object of driving him out had been almost achieved. The fighting which has gone on since early in 1917 and still continues has had more complicated main springs. In essence, the revolt which began in May of last year was a revolt against the Parliamentary Government, which, with the completion of the new constitution and under the favoring hand of President Li Yuan-Hung, seemed about to take on permanence.

The Manchu court party took advantage of the turmoil to set the boy Emperor upon his old throne for a brief fortnight. In the end, the President's old Premier, Gen. Tuan, arrived with overwhelming forces and restored order, but Li Yuan-Hung relinquished his office to Acting President Feng. Why has there not been harmony after this, which, with the failure of the military governors and the Constitutionalists who have since taken up arms at the South, the outbreak did not end in a restoration of true Parliamentary government? They did not trust President Feng. They have acted for a reconvenation of the Parliament which perished at the beginning of the imperialist revolt, and declare they have called in vain.

China in recent weeks has therefore been a republic with two Parliaments, one at Peking and one at Canton, each denouncing the other. The Southerners have control of five southwestern provinces, and of some districts in others, and recent dispatches tell of sporadic engagements. The Southern Government recently published in the Shanghai Gazette and elsewhere a manifesto signed by Foreign Minister Wu Ting-fang, the tone of which by no means closed the door on reconciliation. The Government called the Northerners a group of militarists and autocrats, and denounced their attempt to raise money in every possible way to carry on with the South. But it stated that "no pains have been spared and again to make clear that the sole aim of the Constitutional Government is to uphold the law and the constitution. Its sole claim is for the restoration of the dissolved Parliament. If the order for reconvenation is issued to-day there will be peace to-morrow." At about the same time there came news of a conference of northern military governors at Tientsin, at which, according to the report, Feng in attempting to settle the dispute with the South by negotiation was strongly favored by all the generals. But the South has since made it plain that, insisting on the reconvenation of a new one, it will refuse to recognize any of the steps taken by the present body.

Competent observers have not despaired of a stable republican government in China. Thus the Far Eastern Review warns outsiders that all Chinese are not to be judged by the handful of blind and conscienceless braves and brigands who have managed to seize and hold power in some sections. "It would be unjust if we did not do everything in our power to dispel the notion that it is likely to form in the foreign mind that the whole of the country is corrupt, venal, and unparitible. Once let the Allies demonstrate that they are ready to help democracy, and there will be a tremendous awakening in China. Then the real Chinese will be able to effect reforms and demonstrate their capacity to develop along modern lines."

London's "Bobbies."

During the last four years 9,180 special constables have passed through the ranks of the London city police reserve. Of these the majority have gone into the army. Over 2,000 still remain on active duty.

Detlor

The atmosphere on January 13th this year and last were vastly different, and it looks very much as though we were going to have a January thaw this year, and the New Year was heralded in with quite a heavy rain fall, followed by a wind.
Election was not hot enough in our township to cause much excitement. Mr. Turfitt was re-elected, and one of the old council with three entirely new members.
Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Rickett and little son have returned from their month's holidays, and Miss H. Jackson, Agent Relief, has gone away to another station.
Mr. Fred Ruppnow, who had quite a serious attack of the flu, followed by a relapse after a few week's lapse of time, became suddenly ill again. We understand Dr. Embury was called in, who claimed it was appendicitis, and accordingly, accompanied by his wife and sister, Mr. Ruppnow started to Toronto where they have several relatives living, and he will get some treatment, probably operated on. We have heard of people going to Hospital for appendicitis and it wasn't appendicitis at all. We certainly hope it isn't anything serious.
Miss Bateman has returned and resumed her duties as teacher. During Mrs. M. Smith's illness she has changed her boarding place and is now a resident of town at Mr. J. Bremner's.
Mr. Rickett bought a carload of hay and shipped it in and some of the people are benefitting themselves thereby.
We are now having a carload of mail service, no mail is allowed to be put on the outgoing train on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday mornings, and regardless of how important a mail a person might require a mail has to be detained from Friday-noon until Monday-noon goes before the up train arrives. It certainly is a long cold drive. There seems to be a lot of misunderstanding regarding trains leaving L'Amable Station, which takes in nearly all of the traffic from points east as Port Stewart, McArthur's, Lehigh, Hartsville and Hermon. The days above mentioned going out are 10.10 a. m. and arriving supposed to be 15 mins. to 3 p. m. on the other days of the week the up train is due 11.30 and 15.30 p. m. leaving for south. It is very inconvenient to people from a distance. The telephone was out of repair, too, after the sleet and wind of recent date.
Mr. Wm. Hennessy, Jr., who has not been in this district for about fifteen years, and not heard from for some time surprised his family by forwarding to him his personal papers, about at the first of the war—C. E. F. and with the exception of being gassed and not badly wounded, came through and was sent home from England since peace was made, and arrived home just a week and two days, from the day his father was brought home from Belleville Hospital, having succumbed from cancer, and his remains were taken to Egan Creek Cemetery and buried near his mother, father, brother and sister. Mr. Hennessy received one of those dread messages last winter in regard to his one older son who had lived with him most, and it is reported he failed soon afterwards. Rev. Cantrell preached a memorial service, most befitting in honor of the fallen hero.
Rev. Ferguson preached on Sunday last a memorial service for two heroes who "paid the price and died that we might live,"—namely Jack Turfitt and Jimmie Anderson, both boys of Turfitt, another two of Turfitt had fallen, Hugh Letts and Robbie Hoover, one of the two brave little lads who have been a great source of help to their mother since they were children. We learn with regret the shock of Robbie's death was too much for his mother and we feel sure they are now reunited.

St. Ola

The death of Mr. Jim Welch took place last Monday night after seven long years of illness. The funeral took place on Thursday afternoon, Rev. A. Poulter officiating.
Mr. and Mrs. Jim Walt and son, of Frankford, visited relatives in St. Ola last week.
Miss Pearl Stoenburg visited Miss Viola Ham last Saturday.
Miss Pearl Longmire is visiting her mother and children here.
Miss Jennie Sargent is home on a visit from Toronto.
Rev. and Mrs. Poulter arrived home last week after visiting relatives in Belleville.
Mrs. Arthur Swayne was the guest of Mrs. T. A. Ham last Tuesday.
Mrs. Hiram Reid visited her mother, Mrs. Arthur Welch, last week.
Mrs. W. B. Greer was the guest of Mrs. Arthur Welch on Tuesday.
Miss Christina Welch arrived home last week from her sister's, Mrs. Hiram Reid.
Mr. and Mrs. Frank Gumbel was visiting Mrs. N. Reid on Sunday.

In the town might be very quiet.

"Yes," he said, "from tomorrow on."

"Meaning that you're in charge to-day," murmured the big man absently.

Kent smiled. "I dare say we shall get on very well together, Mr. —" His voice went up interrogatively.

"Bain. Adam Bain, attorney and counselor at law for thirty years in the town of Annals."

"Thank you. My name is Kent. You already know my friend's name. What kind of man is this medical officer?"

"Breed? Not much. More of a politician than a doctor and more of a horse trader than either. Fidelity as a saddle-jumper undoubted."

"Did he perform the autopsy at his own house?"

"Him and the sheriff last evening. Didn't even have an undertaker to help lay out."

The lobe of Kent's ear began to suffer from repeated handling. "The body hasn't been identified, I suppose?"

"Nobody's had so much as a wink at it but those two and Ira Dennett. He viewed the corpse last night. That's why I guess your friend needs his friends and maybe a lawyer."

"Exactly. Mr. Dennett doesn't seem to be precisely a deaf mute."

Lawyer Bain emitted the bubbling chuckle of the fat throated. "It's quite some time since I've won any prizes for silent thought," he stated.

"You are known hereabouts," he added after a pause.

"Very little."

"Gansett Jim, younger, looks as if he kinder cherished the honor of your acquaintance."

Over his shoulder Kent caught the half breed's glance fixed upon him with stolid intensity. A touch on his arm made him turn to the other side, where Sallor Smith faced him.

"Didn't hardly know you with your beard off," piped the old man. "Howdy, professor? You're thickened up like your own wedding."

"Good morning," said the scientist. "Are you going inside? Sit with us, won't you? Mr. Sedgwick is with me."

The ex-sailor started. "Him?" he exclaimed. "Here? There's been quite a lot o' talk."

"Well, yes."

"People are inclined to connect Mr. Sedgwick with the death of the woman."

"What else can you expect?" returned the old man depreciatingly. "Iry Dennett's been tellin' his story. He's certain the woman he seen talkin' to Mr. Sedgwick is the dead woman—willing to swear to it anywhere."

"What about Gansett Jim? Has he contributed anything to the discussion?"

"No. Jim's as close tongued as Iry is clatter mouthed."

"And probably with reason," muttered Kent. "Well, I'll look for you inside."

He returned to join Sedgwick. Together they entered the building, while behind them a rising hub testified to the interest felt in them by the villagers.

Within a tall, wizened man with dead, baby eyes stalked nervously to and fro on a platform, beside which a hastily constructed coffin with a banded cover stood on three sawhorses. On a chair near by slouched the sheriff, his face red and streaming. A few peering men and women were scattered on the benches. Outside a clock struck 11. There was a quick inflow of the populace, and the man on the platform lifted up a chattering voice.

"Feller citizens," he said, "as medical officer I declare these proceedings opened. Meaning no disrespect to the deceased, we want to get through as spry as possible. First we will hear witnesses. Anybody who thinks he can throw any light on this business can have a hearing. Then those as wants may view the remains. The burial will take place right afterward in the town buryin' ground, our feller citizen and sheriff, Mr. Len Schlager, having volunteered the expenses."

CHAPTER VI.

"Dah de murder!"

THE first witness, a sheep herder, rose in his place and, without the formality of an oath, told of sighting the body at the edge of the surf at 10 o'clock in the morning.

Others, following, testified to the position on the beach, the washing of the body to the grating, the wounds and the manacles. Dr. Breed announced briefly that the deceased had come to her death by drowning and that the skull had been crushed in, presumably, when the waves hammered the body upon the beach.

"Then the corpse must have come from a good way out," said Sallor Smith, "for the coasts wouldn't catch it at that tide."

"Nobody knows how the dead came to Lonesome Cove," said the sheriff in his deep voice.

After Ira Dennett was the next and last witness called. Somewhere beneath the elder's dry exterior lurked the instinct of the drama. Stalking to the platform, he told his story with skill and fervor. He made a telling point of the newly finished picture he had seen in Sedgwick's studio, depicting the moonlit charge of the wave-mounted corpse. He sketched out the encounter between the artist and the dead woman vividly.

Then Sedgwick rose. He was white, but his voice was under perfect control as he said:

"It is all true. But I do not know the woman who accosted me. I never saw her before that evening. She spoke strangely to me and indicated that she was to meet some one and go aboard ship, though I saw no sign of a ship."

"You couldn't see much of the ocean from your house," said the medical officer.

"I walked on the cliffs later," said Sedgwick, and a murmur went through the courtroom, "but I never found the woman. And as for throwing her out of a ship, or any such fantastic nonsense, I can prove that I was back in my house by a little after 9 o'clock that night."

He sat down coolly enough, but his eyes dilated when Kent whispered:

"Keep your nerve. The probability will be shown that she was killed before 10 o'clock."

Now, however, Dr. Breed was on his feet again. "Form in line, ladies and gentlemen," said he, "and pass the coffin as spry as possible."

At this Sheriff Schlager stepped forward and loosened the hasty preparations to removing the cover. "The body has been left," said he, slipping the lid aside, "just as"—Of a sudden, his eyes stiffened. A convulsive shudder ran through his big body. He jammed the cover back, and, with fingers that actually drummed on the wood, forced the haps into place.

"She's come to life!" cried a voice from the rear.

"No, no!" rumbled the sheriff, whirling upon the medical officer, he whispered in his ear—not more than a single word, it seemed to the watchful Kent.

The doctor turned ghastly. "Gents," he said in a quavering voice to the amazed crowd, "the program will not be carried out as arranged. The—well, the condition of the deceased is not fit to—" He stopped, mopping his brow.

But Yankee curiosity was not so easily to be balked of its food. It found expression in Lawyer Bain.

"That ain't the law, doc," he said.

"I'm the law here," declared Sheriff Schlager, planting himself solidly between the crowd and the coffin. One hand crept slowly back toward his hip.

"Don't pull any gun on me," retorted the lawyer quietly. "It ain't necessary."

"You heard Doc Breed say the body wasn't fit to be viewed," pursued the sheriff.

"That's all right too. But the doc hasn't got the final word. The law has. And the law says, that the body shall be duly viewed. Otherwise, and the deceased being buried without view, an order of the court to exhumate may be obtained."

"Look at Breed," whispered Kent to Sedgwick.

The medical officer's lips were gray as he leaned forward to a whisper at the sheriff's arm. There was a lightning colloquy between them. Then Breed spoke, with a pitiful effort at self control:

"Lawyer Bain's point is correct, undoubtedly correct. But the body must be prepared. It ought to 'a' been looked to last night. But somehow I—well, with six citizens kindly volunteering to fetch the coffin back to my house?"

Seven times six offered their services. The box was carried out swiftly, followed by the variable hum of excited conjecture. Quickly the room emptied except for a few stragglers.

Sedgwick, who had followed the impromptu cortege with his vision, was brought up sharply by the glare of a pair of eyes outside the nearest window. The eyes were fixed on his own. Their expression was distinctly malevolent. Without looking round, Sedgwick said in a low voice:

"Kent?"

No answer came.

"Kent!" said the artist a little louder.

"Huh?" responded a muffled and abstracted voice behind him.

"See here for a moment."

There was neither sound nor movement from the scientist.

"An Indian looking chap outside the window is trying to hypnotize me or something of the sort."

This information, deemed by its giver to be of no small interest, elicited not the faintest response. Somewhat piqued, the artist turned to behold his friend stretched on a bench, with face to the ceiling, eyes closed and hands on the ruined end. His line now ed faintly in a wraith, suggestive about the whither indelicately.

"Why, what?" cried Kent, wrenching his shoulder free. "Go away! Can't you see I'm busy?"

"I'll give you something to think about. Look at this face of a cigar store Indian at the window. Not it's gone."

"Gansett Jim, probably," opined Kent. "Just where his interest in this case comes in I haven't yet found out. He favored me with his regard outside. And to had some dealings with the sheriff on the beach. Hgt I don't want to talk about him now nor about anything else."

Acting on this hint, Sedgwick let his companion severely alone until a bottle from without warned him that the crowd was retreating. Being around, Kent accented one of the villagers who had just entered.

"Body coming back?" he asked.

"Yes. On its way now."

"What occurred in the house where they took it?"

"Search me! Everybody was shut out by the sheriff and the doc. They had that body to themselves nigh twenty minutes."

At this moment the sheriff entered the hall, followed by Dr. Breed, who escorted the coffin to its supporting sawhorses. The meager physician was visibly at the fag end of his self control. Even the burly sheriff looked like a sick man as he lifted aside the coffin lid and spoke.

"There was reason, neighbors," said he, "why the corpse wasn't suitable to be looked at. Nobody had seen it since last night. We've fixed it up as good as we could, and you'll now please pass by as quick as possible."

In the line that formed Kent got a place behind Elder Bennett, who had decided to take another look for good measure, as he said. The look was a productive one. No sooner had it fallen on the face of the dead than Dennett jabbed an indolent finger in that direction and addressed the sheriff:

"Hey, Len! What's this?"

"What's what?" growled Schlager.

"Why, there's a cut on the lady's right cheek. It wasn't there when I seen the corpse last night."

"Ah, what's the matter with your eyes?" demanded the sheriff savagely.

"You want to hog the limelight, that's your trouble!"

This was evidently a shrewd lash at a recognized weakness, and the elder moved on amid jeering comments. But Sedgwick, whose eyes had been fixed upon Kent, saw a curious expression flicker and fade across the long jawed face. It was exactly the expression of a dog that pricks up its

"The deceased was not drowned,"

Emerging from his reverie, Chester Kent had leisurely risen in his place and made his statement.

"N-not drowned?" gasped the medical man.

"Certainly not! As you must know, if you made an autopsy."

"No autopsy was necessary," replied the other quickly. "There's plenty of testimony without that. We've heard the witnesses that saw the drowned body on the grating it washed ashore on."

"The body never washed ashore on that grating."

A murmur ran through the crowd.

"How do you figure that?" called a voice.

"On the under side of the grating I found a cocoon of a common moth. Half an hour in the water would have soaked the cocoon through and killed the insect inhabitant. The insect was alive."

"How'd the grating get there, then?"

"Dragged down from the high water mark on the beach. It was an old half rotted affair such as no ship would carry. Ask Sallor Smith."

"That's true," said the old seaman, with conviction.

"You're an expert, Mr. Smith. Now, was that grating large enough to float a full grown human body?"

"Why, as to that, a body ain't but a mite heavier than the water, I should say. It'd just barely float it, maybe."

Instantly, but plus several pounds of clothing and some dead metal extra?"

"No."

"The clothes would have been soaked, and handcuffs weigh something," said Kent calmly.

"There might have been extra spars under the grating that got pounded loose on the beach and washed away."

propanated the medical officer desperately.

"Look at the face," said Kent, with finality. "This is a bad case. Most of you have seen drowned bodies. Did any one ever see an expression of such terror and agony on the face of one who came to death by drowning?"

"No, by thunder!" shouted somebody.

"He's right."

Others took up the cry. Clamor rose and spread in the room. The sheriff silenced it with a stentorian voice.

"What are you trying to get at?" he demanded, facing Kent.

"The truth. What are you?"

Schlager's eyelids flickered, but he ignored the counterstroke. "Look out! It don't lead you where you won't want to follow," he returned, with a significant look at Sedgwick.

"This is as far as it has led me."

"Kent is in his clear, even voice. The body, already dead, was dragged down and soaked in the sea and then washed to the grating by a man who probably is or has been a sailor."

"Then the deceased met death on shore, and presumably by violence," said Lawyer Bain.

"It's murder!" cried a woman shrilly. "Bloody murder! That's what it is!"

"Murder!" echoed a voice from the doorway. Gansett Jim, half negro Indian, half negro face alight with fury, stood there pointing with stiffened hand at Sedgwick. "Dah de murder!"

"The dnd's eye ain't mates!"

Chester Kent, already complacent in his spotless white damask, made himself doubly so by drawing out a monocle and deftly fixing it in his right eye. He leaned over the body to look into the face, and his head jerked back the merest trifle. Bending lower, he scrutinized the unmanicured wrist. When he passed on his lips were pursed in the manner of one who whistles coisely.

He resumed his seat, heady. Sedgwick, clanking to look down at the monocle, Sedgwick started and stared. Kent's arm, as seen through the glass, stood forth, monstrous and distorted, every line of the brawny arm showing like a farrow.

The monocle was a powerful man nifying lens.

The sheriff's heavy voice rose. "Any one here present recognizes or identifies the deceased?" he droned, and, with

TO END NOBILITY MOTHER GAVE

Canadian Plan Strikes at Very Ancient Institution.

Proposal is Called Radical and Affects Titles That Run Back to the Old French Regime.

The report from Ottawa that the Canadian nobility is to be abolished may be the first news to not a few on this side of the border, as well as a nobility. The proposal is called radical, and it certainly does strike at a very ancient institution, states a writer in Providence Journal. If such a law is enacted in accordance with the recommendations of the government, in the form of an order in council, "no hereditary title shall hereafter be conferred upon a British subject resident in Canada," and "appropriate action shall be taken by the government to provide that, after a prescribed period, no title held by a British subject now or hereafter ordinarily resident in Canada, shall be recognized as having hereditary effect."

The reference presumably is to the titles that have come down from the period when the king of France "conceded his North American possessions in fiefs of duchies, marquises, counties, viscounties, baronies and other seigniories to the members of the noblesse, military officers and other men of merit admitted to the noblesse"—according to the old chronicle. And although, as one of the ancient regime has plaintively observed, "democracy has a hatred for natural superiority and endeavors to crush it out," the titular nobility seems to have survived among the "bourgeoisie" and "peasantry" of the hazy young Dominion.

Canada has its college of arms and a number of American citizens who can claim descent from patrician families, or who by feats of arms or other public achievements have shown their merit, have qualified in some of the orders, and are privileged to display the ribbons and wear the court dress of "dark blue, red cord, gilt buttons of the Imperial two-headed eagle, cavalry saber, and blue, red or green sash." At about the time of the Civil war one of these orders invited the membership of "those of the American states disgusted with the vulgarity and tyranny of democracy," and its rolls contain the names of General Gordon, General Vance and other distinguished personages of the Southern confederacy. Among the old French titles are Duc d'Arkansas and Exarch of Nova Scotia.

Fire Losses in North America. As has often been pointed out, the fire waste in the United States and Canada is extravagant. But Canada now proposes to reduce the damage by the adoption of compulsory fire prevention measures in accordance with the recommendations of the commission of conservation, says Providence Journal.

Extending forest fires, the commission affords that since confederation the loss has been $700,000,000, while every year 200 lives are sacrificed in fires, and 500 persons are seriously injured. Canada's per capita fire loss is the largest in the world—$2.75—and that of the United States—$2.26—is second. England's figures are small—64 cents—but large in comparison with the 13 cents reported in Switzerland. France has a per capita loss of 74 cents. Conditions in these several countries do not seem to justify such an extraordinary difference in the fire records. Probably the explanation of the poor showing on this side of the ocean lies in the better enforcement of safety regulations in Europe, and in holding property owners accountable for the damages caused by fires starting on their premises.

The remedy proposed in Canada is in putting more responsibility upon owners of buildings and other combustible property.

Colored Regiments. In 1896 congress passed a law that colored regiments should be a part of the regular army. The Ninth and Tenth cavalry and the Thirty-eighth, Thirty-ninth, Fortieth and Forty-first regiments of infantry were organized March 3, 1899, a consolidation act was passed and the Thirty-eighth and Forty-first were reorganized as the Twenty-fourth regiment of infantry; the Thirty-ninth and Fortieth were reorganized as the Twenty-fifth regiment of infantry. The Ninth and Tenth cavalry won the reputation of being among the best Indian fighters on the frontier. At the outbreak of the Spanish war, in 1898, the four colored regiments were among the first troops ordered to the front, and they won distinction. At the first battle in Cuba, the Tenth cavalry played an important part of coming to the support of Colonel Roosevelt and the Rough Riders. The Twenty-fifth infantry took a prominent part in the battle of El Caney. The Ninth and Tenth cavalry and the Twenty-fourth infantry rendered heroic service in the battle of San Juan hill.—Boston Globe.

Of Like Minds. Isabella one day had been exceptionally trying, and finally, after numerous corrections, her mother remarked: "Isabella, I should think you would get tired hearing me talk to you so much."

In most decided tones the child returned: "Well, mother, I do."—Burger's Magazine.

Philippines Need Tractors. Long-continued ravages of rinderpest have greatly reduced the number of carabao in the Philippines, writes a correspondent. The continued expansion of agriculture in the islands, therefore, will create a good demand for a light farm tractor to be sold at a reasonable price. Purchases of heavy tractors which sell at high prices will be limited to a few of the larger plantations, but the market for light tractors for small planters and co-operative groups will be general. No such tractor so far introduced into the islands has been satisfactory.

Tobolsk, a Trade Center. At one time Tobolsk was the capital of western Siberia, and an important station for the detention of political prisoners. It is fortunately situated, near the junction of two important rivers, one of them the Tobol from which it takes its name. Not far away lie the ruins of an even older city, which dominated the region before the Russians conquered it. Tobolsk itself was founded by the labor of political prisoners and prisoners of war. It has a unique cathedral, inclosed within a high covered wall, built in imitation of the Kremlin in Moscow by Swedish prisoners of war. The ambitious idea of inclosing the thousand churches of the Kremlin in far off Siberia never got further than this first cathedral. The rest of Tobolsk is a typical little Siberian city, with a so-called palace and the grass grown streets bordered by wooden houses. There are a few shops and banks of more ambitious structure, for Tobolsk is the center of a trade.

Britain's New Star.

Opportunity is not confined to the United States. Some of Great Britain's greatest men rose from the ranks. The newest star to shed its effulgence over the empire is Lord Beaverbrook, who has a seat in the cabinet as minister of information.

He is not yet forty years old and is the son of Max Aitken, a poor New Brunswick clergyman. He first amassed a fortune in Canada, went to England eight years ago, was elected to parliament, was knighted under Premier Asquith, was made a peer under Lloyd George, and is now one of the brainiest and most influential members of the George cabinet.

Yankee Pep Worries Boches. The Yankees are making things mighty uncomfortable for the German troops. A Boche officer, taken prisoner the other day, expressed the situation thus:

"It's this way: The men of the European armies are tired of war and are willing to take things easy whenever they can. But you Americans are fresh and anxious for trouble. You are always trying to start something and you make us damned uncomfortable."

It's advertised!—so is a successful business.

Business is thin skinned. She has to be invited to come—and encouraged to stay.

Right now she is unduly sensitive. So many people have deliberately shut their doors in her face—so many of our merchants have given her the icy stare and cold shoulder—that she is having some difficulty in finding a place to hang her hat.

Now then, in fact that success breeds further success? Isn't it a fact that a diamond in a man's necktie instantly gives her the impression that his pocket is lined with real money?

Then—if Business is not roosting on your trade tree, whose fault is it? Are you doing your part in advertising her acquaintance? In making her welcome? Are you advertising—not in little mealy-mouthed "merely-to-hold-our-trade" squibs, but in Broad, Glowing confidence-creating advertisements that show you have back-bone and the goods that know no setback?

If you are not doing this you have no cause to put up a howl if people do not buy. They naturally think you are having troubles of your own—and everybody flies trouble.

Get out into the highways and byways man—put your name where all the world can see it. Let them know you have faith in your town, your townsmen, your business. Advertise.

The result—You'll be grabbing off orders while your competitor is still trying to muster up enough gumption to warm his cold feet.

Keep Them Smiling

Soldiers Home Coming Campaign

The "Welcome" sign still hangs high on the doors of the Salvation Army Hostels. Help them to keep it there! While our soldiers have need of the comforts—spiritual as well as bodily—DON'T shut the doors in the boys' faces—Keep them smiling!

The Salvation Army appeals for a Million Dollars for the boys who won the victory. This is the first time the Salvation Army has made a general appeal for its work. We urge you now, for the sake of the soldiers, and as a VITAL factor in the solution of Canada's Reconstruction problems, with the Homecoming of her boys, to give and to give liberally! Our men in Khaki may not all be home for another year. While there is a company of Canadians in uniform over here or over HERE, there is work for the Salvation Army Lassie.

The weary waiting and the relaxed discipline spell dangers that MUST be guarded against. A happy smile and a comfortable body help to keep trouble at a distance. Do not let the Hostels shut for lack of funds!

A WORD ABOUT THE HOSTELS—Have you ever been inside a Salvation Army Hostel? If not, ask a returned man about the Hostels in Paris, London, Toronto, Hamilton, or any others that he has stayed in over HERE.

Let HIM tell you about the REAL beds, the home cooking, the fried eggs, and hot coffee—and hot baths. If he knows you very well, he may give you a hint about the spiritual comfort the Salvation Army Lassies give these men far from home and all it means!

A few public-spirited citizens of our town, seeing that no provision was made for outdoor recreation for the people, and fully believing that a healthy outdoor winter sports would tend to the development of the physical and social welfare of the community, formed a committee composed of Messrs. Gillespie, Gavin Wallbridge, Fritz, Rev. T. H. Hall, W. Cross, Grierson and Dr. Fraser. This committee at first intended to erect a large, covered rink where those so inclined might play hockey, have a game of curling or indulge in the fascinating exercise of skating, but finding the season too far advanced for so ambitious a purpose, the committee has had to satisfy itself with the building for this season of an open rink. As the committee have given freely and generously, both of their time and their money to supply what they believe to be a real need and have done so without any expectation of financial gain, the only recompense they hope for will be in seeing our citizens, both old and young, take full advantage of the recreation thus provided for them.

Obituary

MRS. ALFRED CURTIS

After a long and very painful illness extending over a period of several years, Mrs. Alfred Curtis passed peacefully to her eternal rest on January 7th.

After suffering for many years with a fortitude that could only be borne with the aid of the ever ready Helping Hand, she was forced a short time ago to go to Grace Hospital, Toronto, for medical treatment. On arrival there it was found that human aid was ineffectual and it was pronounced that she must go to her eternal rest.
Deceased, who was a daughter of the late Robert and Mary Jane Robinson, was born in the township of Elzevir 53 years ago. Her passing has left a void that will be felt by friends and neighbors alike for some time to come.

Besides her sorrowing husband she leaves to mourn her loss four brothers and two sisters, namely: Robt. J.
George and Minnie, of Elzevir; William and Mrs. J. Wasmann, of Stirling; and Fred, of Belleville.
Funeral took place on Thursday, January 9th, from her late residence near Hart's, thence to Hazard's Corners Church, where service was conducted by Rev. A. C. Hele, of Eldorado, in the absence of her pastor, Rev. W. Merriak, of Queensboro, and was largely attended.

PHILIP RIKLEY

Philip Rikley passed away this morning at his home, 256 Coleman street, after an illness of some months. He was born in Madoc township, June 21st, lived in Sidney. For six years he lived in Ameliasburg, and last December he came to Belleville on account

Fire Company Officers

The annual election of officers of the Alert Fire Company of this village was held in the Fire Hall on Tuesday evening, January 14th, when the following officers were elected for 1919:

Chief—E. Morrison.
Asst. Chief—C. Martin.
Capt.—A. Reid.
Lieut.—J. Armstrong.
Sec.—W. R. Gray.
Treas.—B. M. Richmond.
Foreman of Hose—G. Alcombrack.
Branchman—The whole Company.
Foreman of Hook and Ladder Wagon—Wm. H. Brooks.
Asst. Stoker—John Cooper.
Fire Police—R. T. Gray, C. M. Wall-bridge, Thos. Caverly, R. C. Tufts, I.
Monroe, Robt. O'Riordan, et al.
and Robt. McGhee.

In view of the decision reached by the citizens of Madoc Village and adjoining districts in meeting assembled on January 17, 1919, that a memorial be erected in Madoc in memory of our fallen and also our returned soldiers, it was thought best to secure the opinion of all, especially the near relatives of the fallen and that of our returned men. As to what kind of memorial to erect, whether a building of some kind or a monument, and that whereas a committee was appointed to aid in securing the wish of the people, it is thought best to solicit a candid expression from all or as many as possible. The expressions thus obtained will be to hand at a public meeting to be held in the Town Hall, Madoc, at 8 o'clock on January 25th, or anyone can report to the following committee, who were appointed to secure opinions: T. Burnside, Chas.
Whitlock, G. West, H. Kells, T. H.
Thompson, R. Casement, J. Burns, S.
Fox, T. Squire, Mrs. T. H. Tunney, Mrs. Harrison and Mrs. E. C. Tufts.
It is to be hoped everyone will make an effort to be present next Monday night. Ladies are especially invited to be present at this meeting. The following were elected officers for 1919: Pres.—T. H. Thompson, M.P., 1st Vice,
Joe Burns; 2nd Vice, S. Fox; 3rd Vice,
J. Moore; Sec., G. West, Treas., Fred Curry.

Story of Poacher Who Crossed Line Once Too Often.
Charles Dorsch, Black Rock river man, living in Buffalo, had his second experience with Canadian border officials recently when he and a companion were fined $150 in Bridgeburg Police Court after they had been captured while illegally shooting ducks just after dawn in a little bay in the lake, half a mile above the Fort Erie ferry dock.
Dorsch's first run-in with the Canadians occurred almost four years ago, on Dec. 28, 1914, when he and Walter Smith, of Buffalo, were shot by Canadian soldiers while the Americans were illegally taking ducks in the same little bay above the village.
Smith was killed outright and Dorsch spent time in a Buffalo hospital with a bullet in his shoulder.
Dorsch had an opportunity to resist a little of the Canadian money that was paid him to the amount of $5,000 by the Canadian Government, which did not want to have a serious difference with a friendly government over a duck-poacher. In addition to the fine the guns and motor-boat were confiscated.
Dorsch, with Oliver Summer, a pal, have been in Canadian waters considerably lately. They've been accustomed to take their little motorboat out of its berth before dawn, slide down the harbor and up the river till opposite Fort Erie.
Arriving opposite and a little bit above the Canadian village, they'd shoot across the current, bring up in the weeds on the other shore and string their decoys. It was a fairly good place to pot the mallards when they were flying a couple of weeks ago, and now that the redheads and coot are flying, it's a prime place for them.
Of course all this is against the Canadian law, which not only prohibits the shooting of duck without a license but prohibits shooting the wildfowl from a motor-boat. Dorsch and Summer weren't paying any more attention to the Canadian laws than Dorsch and Smith did, back in 1914.
But the Canadians weren't asleep.
The head of a police chief in Fort Erie now who's a real one. His name is James Edwards and he was a former Royal Northwest Mounted Police officer. He and some of the immigration officers stationed at the ferry dock, including Lieut. J. E. Christie, late of the Canadian army and the Ypres salient, have had their eye on Messrs. Dorsch and Summer for some time now. They've watched the saucy little motor-boat boiling up the river in the half-light and they've heard the gasoline exhaust come delicately across the face of the water. Two or three times Chief Edwards has hustled into his clothes at the sound of the floating put-put-put in the early morning and has sneaked down to lie in the weeds in the hope that the duck-poacher would come near enough to the shore for practical purposes.
On a November morning Edwards was awakened by two shots in rapid succession, then a couple more.
"That's me buccos, all right," he said to himself and jumped into his trousers and coat.
Down at the water the familiar scene was revealed. The decoys were bobbing merrily in the water, a flock was disappearing in the distance but right in plain view, and drawn up from Black Rock with her crew laying quietly below her gunwales, waiting for more redheads.
Edwards lost no time. He charged through the weeds and over the strip of sand.
"Put down those guns," he demanded.
Dorsch and Summer, surprised out of a year's growth, put down two beautiful $50 shotguns and stumbled dazedly to their feet. Edwards clapped on his handcuffs and there were the two poachers — as safe as you please, but looking mighty sickly.
Summer attempted to get rid of a few cartridges in the water, but Edwards blocked that.
"Pick 'em up," he ordered.
"No."
"I say 'yes'—go on, pick 'em up." Since the request was accompanied by a tightening of wiry fingers around Summer's neck, he reached down in the cold water and picked up the cartridges which helped to incriminate him and Dorsch when they appeared before a yawning magistrate a couple of hours later.
The magistrate who presided at the preliminary hearing given the three Canadian soldiers and Officer Thomas Delaney, in December, 1914, for shooting Dorsch's pal, Smith, inflicted each of the culprits $15. One hundred dollars was assessed each for entering Canada outside a regular port of entry, and $50 each for shooting the ducks illegally.

A Loyal Town Crier.
Roses, in Herefordshire, still boasts a town crier who latterly has been making his announcements with the words, "God Save King George the Fifth, Emperor of India, Defender of the Faith and of the Empire; send victory to all his allies, with utter confusion to his enemies—and to the bottomless pit with the Kaiser and all his warty Wilhelms!" Others might use stronger terms about the Kaiser, but the Town Council has decided that the benediction must be eliminated.

Case of Splitter Spittoon.
Every one has heard the old story of the bitter battle between the recently Frank von Neubronn protested to the Board of Health against the lax enforcement of the prohibition against spitting on the streets. The board requested more diligence on the part of the police and von Neubronn was the first man approached. He himself is a member of the Board of Health.

Ten-dollar Annie.
"Ten-dollar Annie," a Winnipeg washerwoman whom the police declare never fails to steal $10—neither more nor less—out of each employer who has it, has just been sent to jail for her latest adventure in thievery.

WINTER DAIRY HINTS
Cleanliness and Succulent and Concentrated Feed Essential.
Grass is the Natural Feed of Cattle
— Make Winter Feed as Much Like it as Possible — A Ration for Laying Hens Which Has Brought Results at the O. A. College.
(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)
THE whole question of winter care of dairy cattle may be summed up in one word—comfort. In order to obtain this, the cattle require a comfortable, clean, well-ventilated, well-lighted stable. The stalls, where animals are fed, should be of proper width and length to accommodate them without discomfort, and also be so constructed as to keep them clean without too much labor on the part of the person in charge. Plenty of bedding is needed, and an absorber such as cut straw, shavings or sawdust, to take up the liquids which cause so much dirt and discomfort to both animals and attendants. A clean gutter behind the animals having the required amount of absorbing material placed in it daily after cleaning the stable, is the best plan of keeping stable and cattle clean. If there be some shavings, sawdust or fine straw scattered along the passage behind the cows it assists in cleanliness and lessens labor.
Feeding.
The natural feed of cows is grass.
The feeder of cows never goes far astray if the winter ration is made so far as possible, similar to that of grass. This is got by using silage and roots, mixed with the dry, bulky fodders, like straw and clover hay.
The mixing may be done by the feeder, if he has time to do so, or it may be done by the cow before and after eating. The cow carries a wonderful mixing apparatus in her stomach, and so far as this part of feeding is concerned, she can do the necessary work of mixing feeds. Mixing before feed is given to the cow, often adds to its palatability and helps usually pays.
In addition to the succulent and dry bulky feeds mentioned, a cow giving milk requires a certain amount of concentrated feed in the form of meals, such a ground oats, oats and barley, wheat bran, oil-cake, or cottonseed meal. Standard Dairy Feed fills the bill excellently in this regard.
Watering Cows.
Next in importance to feed, comes water for milking cows. When cows are producing large quantities of milk they must have large quantities of water. This may be supplied in the stable, or in a trough outside.
In fine weather, animals are better for being a short time outside in the fresh air daily, and they can be conveniently watered at that time. In very cold or stormy weather, they should be watered inside.
Comfort, cleanliness, succulent feed, along with a reasonable amount of concentrates, and plenty of water and fresh, pure air, are the main things required by animals giving milk in winter.—Prof. H. H. Dean, O. A. College, Guelph.

Feeding Laying Hens in Winter.
In order to lay well a hen requires a surplus of food above body maintenance. That is a hen must be in good flesh, not thin. A good laying hen is seldom very fat. The yolk of an egg contains considerable fat. The white is mostly muscle forming food and the shell largely lime. There must be a supply of these over and above what is required to daily maintain the body.
In summer a hen eats tender grass or green shoots, some whole grain, generally some ground grains, mal-ly worms or insects, picks up some gravel or old plaster, and in doing so takes exercise. If she has to hunt all day for these, at times she does not lay very well because she is working hard getting something to eat.
We are feeding now, at the O. A.
College a grain mixture of about the following: Seven parts of cracked corn, two parts of barley, two parts of good oats, one part buckwheat, and three parts of feed wheat. This is fed in deep litter night and morning, the hens going to bed with a full crop.
During cold weather it is advisable to feed a mixture of nearly half corn or buckwheat. A hen will do a little better on such feed. A mixture of two or three kinds of grain gives variety.
At noon, cooked waste house scraps, such as potatoes, cabbage or other vegetable trimming, together with the table scraps, make a good foundation for a wet mash. These scraps are best fed in a crumbly form. Dry them off with whatever chop you may have. A mixture of shorts, barley meal, and oat chop in equal parts, is very good. We use a dry mash which is fed in hoppers.
This is in front of the birds at all times. We are using Government Standard Hog Feed. We have used in previous years, very successfully, rolled or crushed oats.
These ground grains should contain fifteen to twenty per cent. of high grade tankage or beet scrap.
Where milk is given as drink no wet scrap would be necessary.
Be sure to supply green and succulent feeds, such as waste cabbage, roots, clover leaves, or sprouted oats.
There is an art to feeding. When feeding this whole grain night and morning watch the birds scratch. If they are very active feed liberally.
If somewhat indifferent ease off.
Be sure to mix a good amount of the litter clean and sweet.—Prof.
W. R. Graham, O. A. College, Guelph.

LOUDER THAN ANY THUNDER
Modern Guns Make Noise That is Far Above That of "Heaven's Artillery."
Every big noise is compared to thunder, as if heaven's artillery were the greatest noise imaginable. We speak of the "thunder of the guns," and the poets have strung sprung themselves on the terrible noise of a thunder storm. But the plain fact is that man's artillery beats the clouds into dust, if the distance at which each can be heard is any criterion of the intensity and volume of sound.
The gunfire in Flanders has been heard in London countless times, while it is quite impossible to say how far the famous bombardment on the Vinny ridge, produced by human agency, though not gunfire, could be heard. But it is doubtful whether the loudest thunder that ever pealed has been heard 20 miles away.
One of the greatest thunder storms of recent years occurred in the Richmond area, but not a sound of it reached London, and it is on record that when the church steeple of Lostwithiel was destroyed by lightning to the accompaniment of such a roar of thunder as the oldest inhabitant could no longer remember, no sound was heard 30 miles distant.
The explanation of this seeming anomaly is possibly the fact that thunder is produced in the air, and the sound is conveyed by earth waves rather than by air waves.—London Chronicle.

WOMEN HANDLE BIG SHELLS Young Mother Gave Practical Demonstration of Their Physical Fitness to Do So.
When women first were put to work in shell factories in England they haunted only the light field-gun shells.
Later it became necessary for them to turn out larger shells, and doubts were raised as to whether the women were strong enough to handle them. A young mother settled the question.
"Let me lift the shell," she said, picking one up from the floor. "Aye," she commented, "this shell is a mite heavy, 'tis true, but it's not so heavy as my baby."
There is a shell factory in the Liverpool district operated almost exclusively by the daughters of business and professional men. Many are young girls who had never done any kind of work other than needle work and cooking. The heavy work of the establishment is performed by the wives of sailors.
This is a non-profit-making factory and it is the reply of the Cunard company to the Germans for the sinking of the Lusitania.

Rip Van Noah.
It was the first twilight game at the local ball park, and the little fan at the whiskers just had to tell something to celebrate the occasion.
"Boys, here's a new one my son wrote me," he said, as he climbed into the bleachers.
"Well, spring it! Spring it!" begged the "gang." "Let's get it over with."
"Yuh know my son's at the National army camp at Chillicothe. Yeh, he came out flat-footed for the war. Bahbah!" said the little man, as he bit into a cigar which everybody knew was made in Wheeling. "Well, here is what he wrote me this morning:
'Don't Pop—Here is a joke. I hope you see the point. What put the chili in Chillicothe? Why, the draft, of course. Jimmy, P. S. This is some city.' Now wasn't that just like Jimmy. Some little joke. He-he!"
"Yes, some little joke," said the crowd, "you old Mr. Rip Van Noah."

Imitated Koppenick Captain.
An extraordinary instance of Ton-tonic servility where uniforms are concerned has occurred at Essen. A party of three armed individuals, two in soldiers' and one in a policeman's uniform, made a round of all the schools of the town, representing themselves to be authorized to collect the children's satchels. They paid a trifle in each case for the leather straps attached to them, and carried away their booty. After a few days, the whole affair was discovered to be a swindle.
"How it is possible that this could have been carried on for days without anyone having the courage to challenge their authority remains one of the mysteries of the war," says the Rheinisch Westphalian Gazette.

Flying Temperament.
The most eminent of British scientists have devoted special study to the psychological and physiological aspects of flying. One authority says that good eyesight, normal hearing, good "muscle sense," and equilibration are indispensable qualifications. But most important of all is the right temperament—not an easy thing for a medical board to examine. Of the types—the imaginative and the unimaginative—the imaginative youth is said to make the better pilot if he can keep his imagination under control.

Two Prize Captives.
While on sentry duty one night one of the men at Camp Colt, who had been the butt of numerous company jokes, baited two of his worst tormentors as they were endeavoring to slip into camp after taps. In response to his challenge they stated that they were Kaiser Bill and Von Hindenburg.
Thereupon the sentry called for the officer of the guard, reported his distinguished guests, and had the satisfaction of seeing them headed directly for the guardhouse.

What pays your advertising

We all advertise.

A man advertises his character by his deeds, his wisdom by his words or by his silence. A merchant's store, stock and windows speak either well or ill of his business.

So when a man says "no, I do not advertise," he knows not what he says. What he really means is that he does not publish printed advertisements.

Some proclaim this as though it were a virtue—yet spend much effort and invest much money in advertising their business through mediums other than the printed word.

They handle goods fit for a king—yet hesitate to introduce them to Brown or Robinson.

This is inconsistency.

The truth is, printed advertising is a vital force in EVERY business, just as is the "silent" advertising of a product's quality.

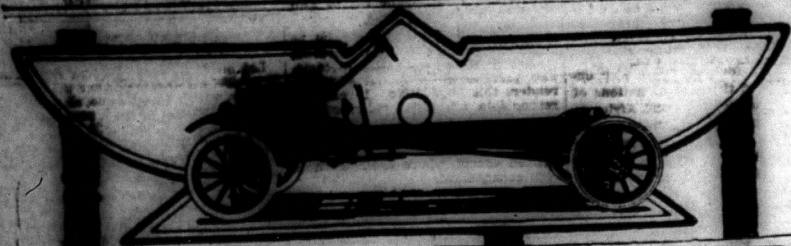

When you employ the Printed word as your solicitor in the Court of Public Opinion, you build good will for your product or service—a good will that results in profit.

If unrepresented at this Court, your interests are as unprotected as though, when involved in a law suit you failed to "enter an appearance" and the case goes against you—by default.

—So it is clear you pay for advertising—one way or the other. If you pay it wages, it will WORK FOR YOU.

If you neglect its offers of service, it will work AGAINST you, in just the measure of its employment by your competitors.

So you ARE paying for your advertising, either out of your profits or by your losses.

Saves Money For The Farmer

PRICES of farm products have reached a high level. The farmer can take full advantage of this situation only by adding to his equipment of time and labor-saving machinery. Time and labor are money. When time and labor are saved, money is saved.

Time and labor-saving devices for working the land do not produce complete results in themselves. The farmer must have rapid and dependable means of placing his products on the market.

The Ford One-Ton Truck will make trips to town so much more quickly than the horse that you will have many extra hours of time to devote to productive work. A large number of farmers have proven the Ford One-Ton Truck to be a time and money-saver—have you?

COULDN'T USE MOTOR CARS

Etiquette Would Not Allow Driver to Sit in Presence of Chinese Dowager Empress.

When the dowager empress of China died in 1908 she left 48 motor cars, among other things, to her heirs. Most of these had been made specially for her, many were gifts from high Chinese potentates and all were gorgeous, palatial, expensive cars. Her favorite was an eight-passenger French machine with its body painted deep orange and its seats upholstered in violet satin brocade edged with round flat blue turquoise stones.

But the dowager never rode in a motor car in her life and not one of the 48 varieties ever left the imperial garage.

It was not because there were no embryo chauffeurs in China. The young Chinese who had been in England and America imbibing Occidental college educations had learned to joy-ride and dozens of them might have qualified as high chancellors of the wheel in the dowager empress' buzz wagon.

But no one may sit down in the presence of a Chinese monarch! And how could any one stand up straight and drive a high-powered motor car?

In 1908 there were not more than a dozen motor cars in all China besides the collection in the imperial garage; today there are about 400, at least 60 per cent of which are driven by Occidental traders, commercial agents and members of the various Western legations. Driving is restricted to a very few of the largest coast cities, where it is rough going at best, and there is not a road in China fit for a motor ride.

MAN NOT HARD TO ANALYZE

Observation Will Enable One to Determine the Qualities Which Will Make Him Valuable.

The qualities that go to make up a man are tremendously complex and yet it is possible by close scrutiny and keen observation to analyze a man and understand him more clearly than he sees himself. There are certain cardinal mental and physical characteristics which can be determined by a visual examination made by an expert. In like manner can be determined the mainspring of the man as exemplified in what we ordinarily consider the various parts of his will, or those factors which govern his actions. The practical application of the studies taken together with his experience and history is then apparent. Knowing his various physical and mental characteristics and his experience, we know what sort of work he is able to do. Knowing his will and what might be termed spiritual characteristics, we know what he will do, provided surrounding circumstances permit. With this in mind we would place each one of our present or new employees at such work as he is best able to do, and we see that this is not necessarily that which he has always done, although in general it does have a more or less close relation with that.

Don't Buy a Pig in a Bag.

When you send money to a mail order house, you "Buy a pig in a poke." You may not get what you send for, as you are always asked to make "A Second Choice." If goods are damaged in transit, there is trouble and at best, an irritating delay in getting matters straightened out. If your local merchant asked you to pay for an article before you ever saw it, what would you say? Yet that is what the mail order house insists upon. Read the advertisements, see what you are buying, and spend your money at home.

Service

The business man, lawyer, poet, priest or Printer who earnestly tries to serve his neighbors will earn both money and real happiness; but the man who works for money alone gets that and nothing more.

The printers in the Review office work for both money and happiness—the quality of printing that brings happiness to our customers and just a little money to ourselves.

HABBIT'S EARS NOT HANDLES

Belief That Seems Commonly Accepted Is Incorrect, According to Writer in Boy Scouts' Magazine.

Some people seem to think that because rabbits' ears are so long it is a good reason to use them as a handle, says Harry Bradford in Boys' Life, the Boy Scouts' magazine. They have told me that "the mother rabbit carries her young around by the ears!"

I have had a pretty good opportunity to observe such a feat, but I have never seen such a performance. It is all right to hold them by the ears, but I always put my hand or arm under their hind legs to lift them up, and then I know I am not hurting them.

One peculiarity I have always noticed about rabbits is their apparent lack of clear vision. If you will notice their eyes, you will see that they scarcely, if ever, move the eyeball to look up or down or at either side, as a cat does. You can't tell when they are looking directly at you as you can with a cat.

If you throw a carrot to them, they will not sight it and go directly to it, but will sniff about with nose to the ground till they find it, and they may go six inches past it a few times before they strike it!

Put a rabbit on a chair, table or box, and he will go carefully to the edge, leaning his head over and seemingly wondering how far he is from the ground, whereas a cat would think nothing of springing down from such a height.

A Good Haul.

A private soldier spied a rooster growing around a farm house in No Man's Land. Being hungry, and having an appetite for roast chicken, this private decided to crawl up on the rooster and trap him in the building. The Tommy was about to lay his hands on the German when a German entered the rear door of the building bent on the same mission. Both were so surprised that they stood for a moment and stared at each other, then the Tommy motioned for the German to do a right flank on the prey they were after and both closed in on him. The rooster was captured by the Tommy, who later returned to the lines with both rooster and German in tow. Later, at the regimental P. O., the German roasted the chicken for his captor, who shared it with him.

Bullet-proof Shields.

Portable trenches is the name given to portable bullet-proof shields used in the Italian army. They can be quickly formed into a kind of movable breastwork, behind which infantry can advance with comparative safety.

One Kind of Demonstration.

The Moralist—There's a common illusion that fine surroundings make happiness—whereas happiness really comes from within.
Man-about-town—That's right.

Do You Want Style?

There is no place in which the fashions are so promptly and correctly displayed, as in the advertising columns. The wholesale purveyors of fashionable goods keep their own buyers and artists in Paris, London, and Berlin, and pass on the information obtained to their customers, the merchants, who in turn keep their patrons properly informed through their advertisements. Even the latest fashion magazines are behind the advertising columns of the newspapers in displaying the most recent fads and fancies.

If you wish to keep abreast of the times, follow the advertisements.

Letters from Our Soldiers

The following were received by Mrs. J. Brady concerning the death of her son, Russell:

Field, Sept. 20th, 1918.

It is with the deepest regret that I have to confirm the official notification of the death of your son, No. 68778 Pte. J. R. Brady.

During the period of his connection with the Battalion he was always willing and fearlessly performed any duty for which he was selected, and had in any other respect an excellent record.

His sacrifice of his life for the great cause for which we fight was a matter of great sorrow among his many friends here who join with me in the expression of sincere sympathy for you in your bereavement.

Yours in sympathy,

R. VANDERWATER, MAJOR.
O. C., 2nd Canadian Infantry Battalion, East, Ontario Regiment.

Field, Dec. 31st, 1918.

I am in receipt of your letter of Nov. 22nd, and in reply would give you the official report as received from the company to which your son belonged.

"During the Cambrai attack, after No. 2 company had reached its objective, there was still considerable machine gun fire from the enemy. Pte. Brady was hit in the thigh, the bullet penetrating to the stomach. The wound, though dressed immediately, was of so serious a nature that Pte. Brady died soon afterwards."

His body was buried in a British Military Cemetery, Ontario Cemetery at Vinchy, near Sans les Marquon.

Yours faithfully,

R. VANDERWATER, MAJOR.

Germany, Dec. 21st, 1918.

Just a line in answer to your letter of Nov. 27th, which I just received. Glad to hear from you as I am well at present. We are having fine weather at present. Have arrived in Germany after three hundred miles of marching.

Sorry about Russell as we were together all the time until we were broken up in England. He went to France and I had to stay behind, and after all I got with him again, and the last time there was any fighting at all he happened to be the unlucky one to get it. I never knew it till the next morning. It was sure an awful fight of rifle, machine guns and artillery. You could not move and we were advancing on the enemy. That was the day we took Cambrai. The first Canadian Division stopped about five miles in the rear of Cambrai and the fourth division went on the next morning and captured Cambrai. I never want to see such a slaughter of men again, both ours and the enemy, of course the enemy lost ten to one of prisoners, killed and wounded.

You were asking me if I knew just where he was buried, but I don't know exactly but it is around Cambrai somewhere. That is three hundred miles from here. Well, it was hard luck anyhow. It was his turn to stay out of the line that trip and mine, too, but we were short of men and had to go in. I never missed a scrap through the whole show and it certainly was some show. It is sure some experience to go through. I think myself lucky to be here today. My brother George was wounded there and I expect he is on his way to Canada now. I expect to be in my way home in about three months time and will have a good talk with you as you can't say much in a letter. Well I will say good-bye.

PTE. C. A. McCaw.

The following were received by Mrs. A. H. Watson from her son, Pte. C. R. Watson, who is now in Belgium:

Dec. 22nd, 1918.

Yesterday and the day before I had the pleasure of visiting Brussels, the capital of Belgium.

Thursday night we received a special pay of fifty francs and early Monday morning we walked to Mont St. Jean, six kilometres away, where we boarded the train for Brussels.

Arriving in the city about ten o'clock in a pouring rain-storm. Proceeding to the Anglo-Belgi Y. M. C. A. we cleaned up and had dinner. The dinner at the "Y" was not very good but was reasonable in price. As the rain continued all afternoon we had no opportunity of viewing any of Brussels architectural beauties but went to the Cinema.

We then went to the Regent Hotel, where we secured a double room for 8 francs. Hotel accommodations are the most reasonable priced of any of our needs.

Owing to the large crowd at the Y. M. C. A. my chum and myself went to the Alhambra restaurant where we had a meal consisting of soup, beef-steak, fried potatoes and coffee. The bill for the two of us was 10 francs, $4.00. Of course we had lots of dishes and plenty of "service."

Yesterday the weather was better and we attempted to view a few of the city's show places. The beautiful Hotel de Ville was our first objective. After "parlez-vousing the ding ding" as they say, several officials were finally approached one in gold and velvet regalia who granted us the pleasure of going through the seat of civic government. Architectural and paintings dating back for centuries adorn the whole of the building.

On the right is the High Market which although built in several differ-

Memorial for Our Soldiers

The adjourned meeting of Madoc and vicinity for purpose of deciding on a Memorial for our fallen heroes was held in Madoc Town Hall on Monday night, Jan. 27th, with T. H. Thompson, M. P., in the chair.

The Committee appointed at a previous meeting to interview the friends and relatives of the fallen, reported, and after hearing the reports it was moved by F. Aylsworth and T. E. Burnside that this meeting here decide in favor of a monument and tablet.

Mrs. Harrison-Joseph Burns—that the place for the monument be on the Armouries grounds or lot east of them.

Henry Kells-Joseph Burns—that Messrs. Kincaid, Burnside, Aylsworth, Mrs. Harrison, Mrs. T. Tunnelly and Mrs. Frank Dufee be a nominating committee to select a committee to go into details.

The following names were selected for committees: T. H. Thompson, M. P., Joseph Burns, Simon Fox, Henry Kells, James Moore, Wm. Jeffrey, T. Burnside, A. Kincaid, F. Aylsworth, Miss A. Thompson, Queensboro, A. Nicolson, Mrs. R. Hanna, Cooper, Jno. McCoy, Remington, Mrs. G. H. Jones, Eldorado, Wm. Wilkinson, Queensboro, Sam. Collins, Cooper, Mrs. T. Nicolson, Hamockburn, E. Cross, Fred Peeney, G. H. Gillespie, Chas. Lapalme.

Henry Kells-Wm. Brooks—that report of nominating committee be accepted with the power to add to it.

F. Aylsworth-Mrs. Harrison—that T. H. Thompson be chairman of committee.—C'd.

T. Burnside-A. Kincaid—that Geo. West be Secretary of Committee.—C'd.

The meeting then adjourned to the call of the Chairman.

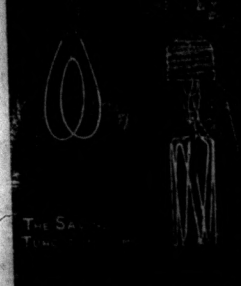

ent architectural styles forms a very homogeneous whole. Across is the King's House which is a museum.

In the square where the British heroine, Nurse Edith Cavell, was executed is a beautiful and imposing statue in her memory. The present monument is just the plaster Paris model which was erected on Nov. 2nd. The permanent statue will be erected when completed.

The Rotunde-Stock Exchange—is a beautiful example of Louis XIV style. In addition to these mentioned there are several beautiful Cathedrals and Churches, a public garden, The Law Courts, King's Palaces, etc. All these are described in a booklet which I am sending you.

On the way home we visited the Waterloo battleground. From the Lion Monument which is an immense earthen mound surmounted by a bronze lion, the whole battleground may be seen. In the tower are many relics of the battle—skulls, skeletons, rifles, lances, swords, cannons, etc. A guide who speaks good English explains everything. Near the monument are several tea-shops, all catering to the tourist's trade, pictures, post cards, scarf pins, cuff links, etc. are sold as souvenirs. Nearly all have a private museum to attract custom.

Ringworm on Child's Head

Caused Great Distress to Neck and Ears—Cured Speedily Effected When Treatment Was Recommended.

There is no disease of the scalp more obstinate than ringworm. The mother who writes this letter is fully realizing what it is, and that other anxious mothers to whom Dr. Chase's Ointment.

This remarkable cure was obtained about two years ago, and has been no return of the disease. I assure there can be no danger if the cure is recommended.

Mrs. D. Stubbins, Grand Rapids, writes: "I am going to tell my experience, with Dr. Chase's Ointment. My little girl had ringworm on her head, which was very fast, and I tried home remedies, but nothing helped her. I then called a doctor, and he opened her scalp, which was as bad as the put on was very severe, and the child would cry for an hour or so after an application. For some time it continued to spread all over her face, and came down to her ears. She suffered terribly, and some kind ladies told me to use Dr. Chase's Ointment, so I got it the first time I put on it. I have never seen it since, and the swelling was all gone. I had finished the first box, and were nearly all gone. I told the people around here to use the Ointment, and I cannot say enough. It is now two years, and my little girl was troubled in the neck and it never came back, so you see she is completely cured. I am at liberty to use this statement in behalf of others who may be afflicted in a similar manner."

Joseph Brenner, J.P., endorses the statement as follows: "This is a statement that I am personally acquainted with Mrs. D. Stubbins of Grand Rapids, and believe her statement reference to Dr. Chase's Ointment to be true and correct."

THE GOSPEL OF HATE.

How Bolsheviks Carry Out Their Policy of Murder.

How the Bolshevik propagandists of the "Red Terror" proceeded with the work of preparing the minds of the Russian workmen and peasants for the task of wiping out the capitalist and middle classes is described in detail in recent issues of the Berlin Tagblatt by Hans Vorsi, the generally well-posted Moscow correspondent of that leading Liberal German newspaper. The stories sent out by the German writer seem to show that the Bolshevik Extraordinary Committee for Fighting the Counter-Revolution stops at nothing in its desperate efforts to maintain the Bolsheviks in power.

Carl Radek, named shortly after the October revolution of last year as chief Bolshevik propagandist, has been carrying on propaganda work at home and abroad, especially among the German and Austrian soldiers, is, according to Herr Vorsi, one of the principal advocates of terrorism. Writing in the Isvestia, an official Bolshevik organ, of Sept. 6, six days after the attempted assassination of Premier Mikhail Lesnina by a girl Social Revolutionary, Radek, under the heading, "The Red Terror," came out strongly for public executions, openly declaring that also members of the bourgeoisie who "take no immediate part in the White Guard movement" were executed and ought to be executed.

Vorsi sums up the principal idea of the Radek article as follows: "Thus far the Soviet Government has only confiscated the means of production. Now the program of the bourgeoisie of all their personal property as well: money, valuables, furs, good lodgings, warm clothing, in short, everything is to be taken away by force, with the exception of articles of absolute necessity. And this measure is not to be carried out by Government bodies, but by organized divisions of tens of thousands of workers. Where it is a matter of terrorizing one class by another the entire class must take an active part in striking the enemy to earth and in punishing the vanquished. Every single worker must take an active part in the civil war."

Radek closed his appeal by saying: "May the red sword of the mass terror be raised and may it, in the name of the triumph of the popular masses, come down relentlessly upon the heads of the counter-revolutionary bourgeoisie."

Herr Vorsi says that when he showed this article to Khrakhan, Acting People's Commissary for Foreign Affairs, the latter asserted that it was merely Radek's private opinion and that the Soviet Government had no intention of carrying out such a program, but Vorsi points out that Radek is a power in the Bolshevik Government, and that his ideas have a strong following in ruling circles. Furthermore, he says that the moderate and well-balanced members of the Soviet Government told him personally that under certain circumstances the measures proposed by Radek might really be carried out. Larin was the man who, as briefly reported in a London cablegram of Sept. 30, told Herr Vorsi that the Bolsheviks were completely in line in what they were practically saying in their article. The German writer quotes a Bolshevik paper called the Red Evening Gazette as hurling the following threat at the bourgeoisie:

"We are able to wipe you out to the last bourgeois without even leaving any to perpetuate your race. We don't need you. We can get along without you. And if every workman, soldier, sailor and peasant takes it upon himself to destroy only a single parasite your end is here."

Real Money.

Forgetting how to figure in "regular money" and learning how to calculate in "this doggone stuff" is one of the first worries of the Canadian soldiers in France. "Regular money" is good dollars and cents, nickels, dimes and quarters. "This doggone stuff" is the name applied to French francs, usually paper money, often as low as single francs, or twenty cents for most small change currency. The soldiers do not like French paper money. They say it is trash, and it is hard to count. On the other hand, the French are shocked when a soldier crumples French paper up and shoves it in his pocket the way they do "back home." French money is to be handled in the pocketbooks and not crumpled. "Look at some real money once," a Tommy told a merchant, and flashed a bright new silver certificate. When he crumpled it up in his fist to show how "real money" can be used, the Frenchman almost fainted.

Jimmy Got a Knife.

A merchant, while engaged in the office the other morning, discovered that he had left his pocketknife at home and as he needed one urgently he asked the different clerks, but none of them happened to have one. Finally the errand boy walked in and the merchant called him, asking if he was able to produce the desired article. Jimmy handed over his knife. "How is it, Jimmy, that you alone out of my entire staff seem to have a pocket-knife with you?" asked the merchant, eyeing Jimmy with undiplomatic admiration. "Dunno, sir," replied the youth, "unless it's because my wages are so low that I can't afford more'n one pair of trousers."

The Vandals.

The famous battery of Bruges was used by the Germans as a garage and workshop during their occupation of the city. Allied troops on entering the city found the interior walls of the historic structure broken down and chimneys added to meet the needs of the workmen.

Karlovi Curse Takes Effect

CONNOISSEURS of curses will admit that the curse imposed upon the House of Hapsburg by the Countess of Karlovi in 1843 was a complete curse, and that it has been fulfilled in a manner that can be claimed for few maledictions. Many times since it was uttered has it been recalled as one by one the calamities called down upon the head of Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria were fulfilled, and now with the collapse of the dual monarchy, the disappearance of the children of the last emperor and the possibility that some such fate may overtake the survivors of the Austrian royal family as befell the Romanoffs, it is brought once more to our minds. In Austria it has had for fifty years the most force of an unwritten law. Every Austrian and Hungarian had heard of it. Many of them agreed that what was said was well said, and thought the words had almost the authority of a scriptural passage. History has shown that when the Hapsburgs seemed for some reason slow in arriving there never lacked hot-headed patriots to hasten the desired event.

At the age of 18, Francis Joseph had the responsibility of dealing with the Hungarian rebellion which aimed to set up Hungary as an independent nation. He dealt with the ringleaders when they fell into his hands with great severity. They were hanged or shot. One of them was a son of the Countess Karlovi, whose acknowledged leader of the Hungarians were as follows: "May heaven and hell blast his happiness! May his family be exterminated! May he be smitten in the persons of those he loves! May his life be brought to ruin." And so, since 1848, it has come to pass. If the aged countess could be alive to-day she would be entitled to claim that she had made a good job of the cursing, and would no doubt take pride in the fact that her grandson is now a more important figure in the nation than her blood have done something to bring about the final downfall of the once haughty House of Hapsburg.

When the Empress Elizabeth, wife of Francis Joseph, was assassinated, a Vienna newspaper boldly recounted some of the misfortunes that had fallen upon the Hapsburgs. "On Jan. 30, 1889," it said, "Crown Prince Rudolf took his own life in his hunting box at Mayerling. In May 1897, Sophie, Duchess of Alençon, at one time the affianced bride of Ludwig II. of Bavaria, was burned to death in Paris. On June 16, 1867, the Emperor Maximilian of Mexico, the emperor's brother-in-law, was shot by a firing party at Cuernavaca. His consort, the Belgian Princess Marie Charlotte, lost her reason, and has been in the last thirty years under restraint at the Chateau of Boulogne. Archduke William Francis Charles died in the summer of 1894, at Baden, near Vienna, of a fall from his horse. Archduke John of Tuscany, who had been living in America, who had seen Sir Walter Scott alive, died recently. He was ninety-four years old and had been a resident of Minnesota for 50 years, says Minneapolis Tribune.

On his ninety-third birthday, Sept. 11, 1916, Mr. Douglas described in detail his seeing the author of the Waverley novels in 1831. With his father, the Minneapolis man was driving in an old-fashioned, high-seated rickety gig along a road near Abbotford, Scotland, when "a funny-looking little man with a queer Scotch bonnet on his head and garbled stick in his hand," halted them.

Mr. Douglas's father checked his horse and chatted with the man for 15 minutes. Afterward the youngster was told that the little man was none other than the noted author. During the last 20 years persons who could boast of having seen Scott alive have become fewer. Two years ago it was practically conceded that Mr. Douglas had sole claim to the distinction.

Their Epitaph.

"There was the gun, still in position, and beside it two dead gunners. In front of one lay two dead Huns; in front of the other there were three. Our fellows had sold out dear, and held out long, as the heaps of cartridge shells around the gun showed plainly."

More Dangerous Than War.

It is not always the greatest danger which is accompanied by the most serious results. A young man from Indiana who had gone through two more battles as an ambulance driver was taken up behind the lines, received never so much as a scratch. Later he took a walk in the woods of Indiana. He was hit by an automobile and seriously injured and put out of commission.

RAPID STROKES IN SURGERY

War Has Brought Discoveries That Alleviate Pain and Heal the Most Dangerous Wounds.

"Bipp" is one of the new words that will be added to the dictionary as the direct outcome of the war. "Bipp" is a combination of bismuth, iodolol and paraffin paste, and is the name given to one of the most important surgical discoveries of Dr. Rutherford Morrison, a famous operative surgeon of London. It exercises a strange charm upon the treatment of dangerous wounds.

In the early days of the war doctors employed the older forms of operative surgery, which entailed long periods of suffering to the wounded soldier. By the new process the diseased tissues and infected areas are excised, the parts thoroughly drenched with pure spirit, and after the application of a thin layer of "bipp" the wound can in many cases be sewn up immediately with every prospect of primary union and no further distress to the patient. Given wounds associated with bone injuries or damaged joints, have been successfully treated by this method, and compound fractures have lost much of their seriousness.

One of the most marvelous cases is recorded at a London military hospital. A piece of shell penetrated a soldier's chest and diaphragm, passing into the abdominal cavity. These terrible injuries healed without subsequent ill consequences, the track of the missile being excised and the wound sutured after a thorough application of "bipp." Similar success has been attained in cases of gas gangrene, which is deprived of its chief terror since the germs of this infection can no longer thrive.

JOINED RANKS OF PROFITEERS

Indian Had the Stereotyped Reason for Increasing His Price for Basket of Berries.

An Indian in one of the western reservations was in the habit of bringing to Mrs. Gray each spring several baskets of wild berries for which, from time immemorial, he had always charged 50 cents a basket. A few days ago he paid his annual visit to Mrs. Gray's back door. The maid took the berries and tendered the usual payment. The Indian shook his head. "One dollar a basket now," he said. The maid called her mistress and explained the difficulty. Much surprised, Mrs. Gray again offered the money to the Indian, who once more refused to accept it. "Why is this?" asked Mrs. Gray. "The baskets are the same size as usual, are they not?"

"And the berries are not scarce this year, I know, because I have seen bushes loaded down with them on my rides about the country here."

Met Sir Walter Scott.

The Rev. John Douglas, said to have been the only living person in America who had seen Sir Walter Scott alive, died recently. He was ninety-four years old and had been a resident of Minnesota for 50 years, says Minneapolis Tribune. On his ninety-third birthday, Sept. 11, 1916, Mr. Douglas described in detail his seeing the author of the Waverley novels in 1831. With his father, the Minneapolis man was driving in an old-fashioned, high-seated rickety gig along a road near Abbotford, Scotland, when "a funny-looking little man with a queer Scotch bonnet on his head and garbled stick in his hand," halted them.

Mr. Douglas's father checked his horse and chatted with the man for 15 minutes. Afterward the youngster was told that the little man was none other than the noted author. During the last 20 years persons who could boast of having seen Scott alive have become fewer. Two years ago it was practically conceded that Mr. Douglas had sole claim to the distinction.

Their Epitaph.

"There was the gun, still in position, and beside it two dead gunners. In front of one lay two dead Huns; in front of the other there were three. Our fellows had sold out dear, and held out long, as the heaps of cartridge shells around the gun showed plainly."

They sold out dear, they held out long. You might write a biography of those two Yankees, fill it with citations of their steepling conduct, recount the whole story of the short, sharp, bitter encounter northwest of Toul in which they died, and in the end all your fine words, all your fair-phrased tributes, could express nothing finer than those two simple statements of fact. "They sold out dear," they held out long.

It is not always the greatest danger which is accompanied by the most serious results. A young man from Indiana who had gone through two more battles as an ambulance driver was taken up behind the lines, received never so much as a scratch. Later he took a walk in the woods of Indiana. FRENCH PROUD OF DOG HERO

Brave Deeds of Artemis Have Won Him Wide Renown Among the Fighters for "La Patrie."

There was a foggy night once when his acute hearing failed Artemis, who was doing guard duty out on No Man's Land. Artemis, it must be explained, is a popular hero of France, a dog of uncertain pedigree, with a mixture of the Great Dane in him and a touch of the French mountain sheep-dog. So serious was the result of this treachery on the part of his ears that a section of his regiment was cut off. Poor Artemis! He had always been so faithful and had so often saved his friends.

But they trusted him still, and to prove it, they dispatched him with a note attached to his collar warning their comrades of their danger. It was a hot night on the line, and the bullets were flying fast. Phut! phut! they fell round the flying feet of Artemis, but he paid no heed to them. His reputation was at stake, and he redeemed it. He got through with his message. Aid was sent to his squad. It arrived in time. And there followed a celebration in honor of Artemis, arranged by the colonel himself.

The hero, however, was not yet satisfied that his duty was done. At times he continued to act as courier and patrol, and no accidents interfered with his efficiency now. Finally came a day when the captain commanding him found his own life threatened by the attack of two Boches. None of his men were near him. But Artemis was. The captain managed to kill one assailant. As he did so, the other cocked his rifle to shoot. Whereupon Artemis, exerting all his strength, sprang at the man's throat, seized it so viciously that he strangled him. The captain was saved. So was Artemis; but both went to the hospital.—Mrs. Elphinstone Maitland, in People's Home Journal.

WHY PEOPLE LIVE IN CITIES

Subject Discussed in a Way That May Please or Not, According to One's Disposition.

In the American Magazine, Bruce Barton says, in talking about his old home town:

"Rousseau once remarked that he had never lived in Paris, except for one definite reason—to get money enough to live somewhere else. There are times when I have had a similar feeling toward New York. Times when the stress and strain and fretting of the job grew wearisome; when my cylinders all are full of carbon, and my valves give forth a leaky sound; when the white lights are only an impertinence, and the noise of motormen tramping on their bells is madness in my ears."

"When that time comes, as every spring it does, I go home, and, speaking with my wife privately, I say: 'My dear, why linger we longer in a world like this? We are but strangers here at best; Foxboro is our home.' And we fill up the cold coffee bottle and place the ham sandwich in the bag, nestling it tenderly beside the fishing tackle, and lie us to a land that is better and purer and sweeter; where the straight and narrow way takes the place of the way called Broad, and there is no white light but the evening star."

Frail, Sickly Children Improve Rapidly on Vinol

The reason we so strongly recommend Vinol for frail, sickly children is because it is a non-secret remedy which contains Beef and Cod Liver Peptones, Iron and Manganese Peptonates and Glycophosphates—but no oil—the very elements needed to build them up. It is delicious to the taste, and children love it.

These Two Mothers Have Proved This.

Brinkbridge, N.Y.
"My little daughter, 15 years old, overworked and was run-down, tired all the time, nervous, had headaches, couldn't eat and had to stay out of school. Vinol has built her up. She has a good appetite, no more headaches and has returned to school again."—Mrs. Lester Andrews.
"My little boy was weak, puny, and tired all the time, did not want to do anything. Vinol was recommended and it built up his strength and made him healthy. Now he runs and plays like other children. We certainly believe in Vinol for children."—Harley Clay.

Ever hear of the war in Europe?—Its Advertised

It's advertised!—so is a successful business.

Business is thin skinned. She has to be invited to come—and encouraged to stay.

Right now she is unduly sensitive. So many people have deliberately shut their doors in her face—so many of our merchants have given her the icy stare and cold shoulder—that she is having some difficulty in finding a place to hang her hat.

Now then, isn't it a fact that success breeds further success? Isn't it a fact that a diamond in a man's necktie instantly gives you the impression that his pocket is lined with real money?

Then—if Business is not roosting on your trade tree, whose fault is it? Are you doing your part in cultivating her acquaintance—in making her welcome? Are you Advertising—not in an sneaky, mealy-mouthed, "merely-to-hold-my-trade" squall, but in broad, glowing confidence-creating advertisements that show you have back-bone and the goods that know no setback?

If you are not doing this you have no cause to put up a howl if people do not buy. They naturally think you are having troubles of your own—and everybody flees trouble.

Get out into the highways and byways man—put your name where all the world can see it. Let them know you have faith in your town, your townsmen, your business. Advertise.

The result—You'll be grabbing off orders while your competitor is still trying to muster up enough gumption to warm his cold feet.

The sympathy of the whole community was extended to the bereaved family of Mr. W. J. Moorecroft, of Madoc Township, and sister of Mr. D. A. Moorecroft, of this place. The funeral service was conducted by her pastor, Rev. Merrick, in the Methodist Church, after which the remains were laid to rest in Greenwood cemetery. Among the floral tributes was a pillow from her brother and a cross from the Methodist Ladies' Aid of which she was a member.

We are pleased to hear that Mr. Robert Fleming and Mr. Jno. Generous are improving after a severe attack of pneumonia.

There will be no service in the Methodist church here on Sunday next as Quarterly service will be held at Hart's.

The Presbyterian Church will also have no service, as Rev. Thompson intends holding service at Bannockburn at night.

We gladly welcome back to our midst, Pte. Fred Campbell, of the 49th Highlanders, also Pte. Arthur Generous, of the 155th Batt., and Pte. David Blakely, also of the 155th Batt.

On Friday night of last week over fifty friends and neighbors met at the home of Mr. Robert Robinson to welcome his bride to this vicinity and presented them with two lovely chairs and centre table. A suitable address was read after which lunch was served and all report a very pleasant evening.

Cooper at the home of the bride's mother on Monday evening, January 13th, when Addie Rachel, only daughter of Mrs. W. West, became the bride of Mr. Harry Arthur Young, of Brocton, N.Y. The ceremony was conducted by Rev. A. C. Hie, of Eldorado, in the presence of the immediate relatives of the bride and groom.

At the strains of the wedding march played by Mr. L. Herberston, of Queensboro, cousin of the bride, the bridal party entered the parlor and took their places beneath an arch of evergreens and white ribbon. The bride, who was becomingly attired in a beautiful dress of white shadow lace over net with silk trimmings and wearing the groom's gift, an exquisite gold neck chain with emerald and pearl settings, was given away by her uncle, Mr. John B. Shaw, of Eldorado.

Miss Annie Shaw, cousin of the bride, acted as maid of honor and wore a becoming gown of pink silk crepe de chine. Mr. Melvin King, of Cooper, friend of the groom, was groomsmen.

The groom's gift to the bride was a gold brooch and to the groomsmen gold cuff links. The bride was the recipient of many beautiful and useful gifts, among them being several sums of money from relatives, a set of 12 silver teaspoons from the Methodist Sunday School, and a silver casket from the community.

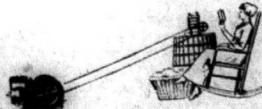

A host of friends join in wishing the happy couple a long and prosperous life. They will reside at Brocton, N.Y., where the groom is proprietor of an extensive grape farm.

CHAMBERS-BROWN

A very pretty wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. Lough, Eldorado, at high noon on January 15 when Edythe Jane (Jennie) Brown, cousin of Mrs. Lough, became the bride of Kenneth Byrdel Chambers, Rev. A. C. Hie, of Eldorado, conducted the ceremony.

The bride, who was given away by Mr. H. Lough, wore a gown of white silk tricot with silver and pearl trimmings and a veil with orange blossoms and carried white roses. The young couple were unattended. Mrs. Hearst, of Belleville, aunt of the bride, played the wedding march, and during the signing of the register Mrs. Hie sang "O Perfect Love." The decorations for the occasion were very beautiful, the parlor being in green and gold, and the dining room in green and plush pink.

After the ceremony the guests sat down to a dainty wedding repast, which was served by six intimate girl friends of the bride. The wedding gifts were many and costly, showing the high esteem in which the young couple were held.

The bridal party left amid showers of confetti and good wishes for Toronto and points west, the bride travelling in a gabardine dress of rocky shade and muskrat coat with hat and muff to match the gift of the groom. On their return Mr. and Mrs. Chambers will reside near Eldorado.

VENN-WEST

A pretty wedding was solemnized at ity Church, Hadley, by special license, on December 20, Rev. A. Peters officiating, when Cpl. Earl Taylor, 20th Batt., son of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Taylor, Trenton, formerly of Madoc, married Miss Edyth Percy, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Percy, Mafeking Road, Salford.

The bride is well-known and is highly esteemed around Salford and has for some years been a nurse, in which capacity she has made many friends.

The bridegroom went over from Canada to fight on behalf of the Motherland, and on the cessation of hostilities and the signing of peace, intends to return with his bride to Canada. Mr. Percy gave away his daughter, who looked charming in a navy blue costume and fawn velvet hat.

The bridesmaids were Miss Bessie News, attired in hollyhock costume and hat to match and Miss Hazel Morris, who wore a dress of fawn silk and white felt hat. Each bridesmaid carried a lovely bouquet. Pte. Herbert Percy, brother of the bride, acted as best man.

On leaving the church after the ceremony the happy couple were greeted with showers of confetti. A reception was held at the home of the bride's parents, after which they entrained for Chester for their honeymoon.

On learning that the Women's Institute hold their annual Box Social on or about February 14, St. John's Sunday School decided to postpone theirs until further notice.

Mr. Robert Martin, of the 8th concession of Huntington, when in the office the other day reported seeing countless numbers of pollywogs swimming in the rapids of a spring creek at the back of his farm, and although he had been living on this farm for 19 years he had never seen anything like this before. The pollywogs were fully an inch and a quarter long.

We know not what a day or an hour may bring forth. Someone said it is always the unexpected that happens. Pat said that is so why then do we not expect the unexpected. Our local mouse informed a young married woman on the street the other day that her hubby had been too familiar with her—the unexpected happened. That young poet expects to be out again in a few days.

—Watch for the Anniversary Supper of the Presbyterian Church on February 10th.

Last week startling reports reached this village of murderous attacks with spades, shovels and axes having been made by the miners of Noyes' mine on each other, that the manager had been called in hot haste, that the two village constables had been seen going that way. Later reports, however, conveyed the information that somebody was pickled and that there had been a little fistie encounter—that was all.

The Agricultural Society having intimated to the Women's Institute that, owing to the assistance its members had given the Society during the days of the Fair, they would be pleased to send two of their members as delegates to the Agricultural meeting in Toronto. The Institute selected Mrs. T. Tumelty and Mrs. J. Miller. The Institute also selected Mrs. T. Burnside to represent the Institute at the Institute meeting held in Toronto at the same time.

Once more Madoc was aroused by the joyful tunes of the Madoc Band playing "When Your Boy Comes Back to You," proclaiming to all who heard that again Madoc was welcoming home two of our returned soldiers, Ptes. Gladstone Bassett and Herbert White, of Eldorado. Music by the Band and words of welcome spoken by T. H. Thompson, M.P., and Rev. T. H. Hall voiced the sentiments of the people. The gathering dispersed by giving three cheers for our returned boys.

Mr. Wm. Ranson, who went west to Yellow Grass, Sask., about 20 years ago, is spending a few weeks in the neighborhood visiting friends. When calling to renew his subscription he said that he could not do without the Review: it was as good as a letter to him. William's head is level. So far as we know there is no other workshop under the sun that will perform an equal service for his fellow man and pay the postage on it for hundreds of miles, if need be, as a newspaper workshop.

Mr. Chesley Pitts has just returned from a five weeks' trip to Florida. He spent a week with Mr. W. J. Atkins, where he received a right royal welcome. Mr. Atkins is well satisfied with his move to Florida. He has an orange grove near his home of 10 acres bearing and 5 acres of young trees. He had a fine garden of onions, lettuce, strawberries, tomatoes, etc. Everything grows there very rapidly. Mr. Pitts also visited Mr. Chas. Ross, who is living in town. He found Charles and family well and feasting daily on grapefruit, oranges, tangerines, picked on his own backyard. Mr. Pitts is so well impressed with the country that he intends as soon as he can make arrangements here to move to Florida.

The Billiard Room

At the last meeting of the Village Council a motion was passed to cancel the pool room license. This act on the part of the Council has aroused a feeling of strong opposition, especially among the employers of outside labor. They take the view that men who work long hours must have some change, both of mind and body, and as these men generally have no local ties, no local interests, no sympathies, have not even the comforts and associations of those whose homes and family ties are here, they must be provided with recreation of some kind and they think that playing billiards furnishes a form of recreation that meets the situation as well as anything that has been suggested.

The Village Council is pleased to see the prosperity that Madoc has enjoyed since the very rapid development of the mineral wealth of this district during the past few years and are fully conscious of the fact that to the enterprise, the intelligence and the investment of a large amount of capital in mining is due the present prosperity of our town. They also fully recognize that our mining men are among the most generous contributors to every enterprise that has for its object the welfare of the community. The mining interests of the place have the welfare of the community as much at heart as any other interests, and it is only a difference of viewpoint that separates them on the present question.

The Review would suggest that the Council invite the mine owners to meet them and discuss in a friendly way the best means of devising some form of recreation for those who are for the present making their home among us. The fact that they are adding to the material wealth of the community entitles them even for selfish reasons to some consideration at our hands. Common courtesy and the principles of Christianity demand that as a people we should live and work together in as much harmony as possible, and the Review believes that a meeting of the two interested and a friendly discussion of the subject would evolve something advantageous to all.

Red Cross News

The Red Cross Society shipped last week 3 cases of supplies to headquarters containing 180 pair of wool socks and a quantity of new clothing and underwear for French refugee children. The value of the shipment was $302.50. The Head Office has requested that the Branches continue to work until 1920 and to use up all supplies on hand. The Red Cross Bulletin for February has a small article calling attention to the work done by Miss Cross, of Madoc, and a few days before her departure for the coast she was presented with a life membership by the Branch. The Red Cross penny bag collections will still be received and voluntary aid for the work until 1920 is requested. Some yarn is still on hand and the Society would like it knitted up into socks as soon as possible.—Sec.

ACETYLENE LIGHT PAYS

It Gives Safe and Efficient Service at Reasonable Cost.
To Ensure Strong and Healthy Foals, Pregnant Mares Must Be Given Exercise, Be Properly Fed and Have Careful Stable Attendance.
(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

ACETYLENE lighting is not by any means a new thing in this country as there are homes here and there in village and countryside in which this system of lighting has been in use for many years. Many improvements have been made in the mechanism of the plant, so that now this system is considered to be absolutely safe and reliable if it receives reasonable care and attention. The cost, of course, is rather more since the war, but even at the present price it is an investment that will return high dividends, probably not always directly in dollars and cents, but in better health, more comfort, less labor and genuine satisfaction for those living in the home, because acetylene gas in burning produces less heat, consumes less oxygen and forms less carbon dioxide than kerosene, for example, and makes a far more brilliant light than even electricity, and it is easier on the eyes. It may also be used for cooking in the house and it is also well adapted for street lighting of villages and small towns.
The acetylene lighting plant consists of a gas generator, gas service pipes, and gas jets or chandeliers.
The generators vary in size according to amount of gas required, one for the home being, of course, much smaller than that required for a large institution or village. The chief parts of the generator are: Water chamber, carbide holder, gas holder, gas filter, gas washer, gas passage pipe, feed pipe, safety vent, sludge agitator and automatic carbide feeder device. The generator for a home requires only a few square feet of space, as it is very compactly constructed, and it is very important that it be kept safe from frost.
The operation of the plant is as follows: The chemical substance used for making the gas is calcium carbide, the same material that is used in bicycle lamps, for instance. It is au-tomatically fed into the water chamber as fast as the gas is used in the lamps. In contact with the water it forms a gas known as acetylene gas, which collects in the gas holder from which it passes through small iron pipes to the lights. In the most modern plants no gas can possibly be generated except as it is required, hence there is no chance, as was true of earlier types of plants, for the gas to accumulate under pressure in the plant and leak out, and become ignited by a raw flame, resulting in an explosion. The automatic feed should be examined occasionally and every care taken to keep it in first-class working order. The directions that come with the plant should be followed accurately and religiously. The writer knows of several plants owned by farmers. Many years, and in a few cases under proper care the results have been very satisfactory. What does it cost? This question can be answered very generally as costs vary with size of plant, etc. In general I would say the initial cost would be about $200, including the work of installation for the average-sized farm home. The carbide for a year will cost in the neighborhood of $12 to $15. Detailed information regarding installation, etc., will be answered upon request by the writer.

lege, Guelph.

PERFECT FORM OF COURAGE.

Shown By the Men Physically Afraid Who Are Moral Heroes.
There is a familiar story of one soldier sneering at another because of his evident trembling just before the battle. The one thus attacked replied: "Yes, and if you trembled as much as I do you would not go at all." This incident is an illustration of the essential difference between physical and moral bravery, and also of the fact that a man may be physically afraid and yet be a moral hero.
The present war has done much to emphasize this distinction, which is one of the greatest values and the most vital importance in many phases of life. It will be abundantly worth while calling attention to this power of moral courage as illustrated by the war.

Bishop Taylor Smith, Chaplain
General to the British Forces, preaching the other day in Westminster Abbey, told a striking story of self-sacrifice:
"I was a wounded Australian soldier in a military hospital, who was asked about his home and family in Australia, said:
"There were six of us lads and mother. We all enlisted, and left mother alone. It was her sorrow and she said she would not be of hers who went back when the Mother Country called. And now five of us are asleep, buried on the battlefields of France, and I am the only one left." There was a few moments of silence, and then he added: "I have not told you the worst. When I got this wound some one called to my mother that I had been killed, and that telegram killed her."

Very similar is the testimony of a leading Baptist minister in England, Rev. F. C. Spurr, who has had abundant opportunity of gaining experience of camp life since the early days of the war. After four years he observes the vast change that has come over our camps and huts. Instead of the rollicking, gay, careless, and confident attitude of men in those days, Mr. Spurr says that the grim determination, hope long deferred, and grave questioning about the future have arrived. Here is one characteristic incident:

The youths of 18 were the most cheerful; the men of 47 the least so.
One, a chemist, drew from his pocket a wallet containing a photograph of his wife, his children, and his grandchild, and he said: "I feel the uprooting more keenly than I can say; I am dazed. I can scarcely realize what has happened; but with a sob—" it is for this fellow and others like him that I am here, and I hope I'll go through like a man.
I am afraid I am not of much use for fighting, but I suppose I shall have a job I can do." And thus it was with more than one man who had passed his 45th birthday.
Nothing could be finer than the stories of moral heroism evinced in these stories. They show beyond question that has been so often and abundantly proved, that the present war is unique in the way in which the cause of righteousness and liberty has which the Allies are fighting has most heart out some of the noblest and truest elements of human life, which would have been impossible in a war of aggression, greed, and tyranny.

What pays your advertising

We all advertise.

A man advertises his character by his deeds, his wisdom by his words or by his silence. A merchant's store, stock and windows speak either well or ill of his business.

So when a man says "no, I do not advertise," he knows not what he says. What he really means is that he does not publish printed advertisements.

Some proclaim this as though it were a virtue—yet spend
much effort and invest much money in advertising their business through mediums other than the printed word.

They handle goods fit for a king—yet hesitate to introduce
them to Brown or Robinson.

This is inconsistency.

The truth is, printed advertising is a vital force in EVERY
business, just as is the "silent" advertising of a product's quality.

When you employ the Printed word as your solicitor in the Court of Public Opinion, you build good will for your product
or service—a good will that results in profit.

If unrepresented at this Court, your interests are as unprotected as though, when involved in a law suit you failed to "enter an appearance" and the case goes against you—by default.

So it is clear you pay for advertising—one way or the other.
If you pay it wages, it will work FOR YOU.

If you neglect its offers of service, it will work AGAINST YOU,
in just the measure of its employment by your competitors.

So you ARE paying for your advertising, either out of your
profits or by your losses.

Saves Money For The Farmer

PRICES of farm products have reached a high level. The farmer can take full advantage of this situation only by adding to his equipment of time and labor-saving machinery. Time and labor are money. When time and labor are saved, money is saved.

Time and labor-saving devices for working the land do not produce complete results in themselves. The farmer must have rapid and dependable means of placing his products on the market.

The Ford One-Ton Truck will make trips to town so much more quickly than the horse that you will have many extra hours of time to devote to productive work. A large number of farmers have proven the Ford One-Ton Truck to be a time and money-saver—have you?

relative fitness of the sire and this feature depends on the breed of the sheep that yields the particular fleece. Grading standards in the United States are established on the basis of Merino blood and the Canadian grading corresponds very closely with this, because of the fact that the finer wools are the more highly valued under existing demand for the fabrics they are suited to produce. though lately it has been found possible to utilize the coarser wools to better advantage than formerly. To offset this disadvantage existing in the lower valuation of his wool for quality, the coarse-wool raiser has the advantage of a greater yield in weight of wool by each individual sheep, and if local conditions are especially suited to the coarse-wooled breeds, and more especially if a large carcass is a matter considered desirable by the raiser, he will, on the whole, do best by sticking to the breed he fancies.

Save All Wheat Seed.

According to the latest information available, the average of winter wheat in Ontario in the present year was only about one-third the average annual average for the past thirty-six years. The decrease was largely due to the light acreage sown last autumn and to the unusually large amount of winter-killing. It was estimated that fifty-six per cent. of the winter wheat was ploughed last spring. A considerable amount of the crop which was left unploughed was sown with barley, oats or spring wheat, either in patches or over whole areas. It is therefore, exceedingly important that farmers make the best possible use of their good wheat for seed purposes this autumn. Those having a surplus of good winter wheat suitable for seed purposes could report to their county agricultural representative or advertise through the press.

Ontario's Corn Crop.

One of the greatest surprises in a year that has been full of surprises is the way in which the corn crop of Ontario has come on in the last few weeks. Fields that seemed certain to prove utter failures in June and early July are now showing excellent growth; better, indeed, than that of average years. The acreage, according to the report of the Ontario Department of Agriculture, is much below the normal, but in most of Eastern Ontario, at least, the yield per acre promises to leave little to be desired.

The Watchtower of Gaza.

Al-Mintar, or the watchtower, still exists to the east of the town of Gaza. It is where Samson is said to have carried the gates of the city. On the road from Gaza to Jaffa are ancient olive trees, many of them more than 3,000 years old, with gnarled bark and immense trunks. There is an old legend which credits Gaza with the invention of the first mechanical clocks. These were perhaps the sand clocks which are still used in some mosques.

Golf In England.

Englishmen, when their attention is not occupied by war, make use of 105,000 acres of land for the purpose of golf playing. There are 2,000 organizations, with nearly 300,000 members, and about 7,200,000 balls are made use of annually.

FOR FUTURE SHEPHERDS.

Fall is a Good Time to Start Keeping Sheep.

For the man who already has his land picked out, and in the possession of suitable buildings for the purpose of wintering, late summer or early fall is the time for starting in sheep raising, and if the beginner has sufficient confidence in his own ability as a judge of sheep, he has no better opportunity to select his foundation flock than is provided at the Fall Fairs. Many of the showmen at the big exhibitions will be found to have, in addition to their first prize winners, plenty of desirable animals in their show string, especially in the case of young rams. Ewes also can be procured more readily at this season than at any other, and the purchaser will have the opportunity of providing his newly-acquired flock with feed at small cost for some weeks to come on grassland that is intended for fall ploughing, and on the stubble fields.

It is perhaps wiser for the new beginner with sheep to start with good grade ewes, than to endeavor to get into the pure-bred line immediately. Experience with the less valuable animals will fit him to produce fancy flock headers and exhibition stock later, and in the meanwhile his profits from disposal of wool and mutton will be satisfactory provided he proves a good shepherd. The disposing of any considerable number of top notch pure-breds, on the other hand, is somewhat of a business, in which a man requires, first a reputation for his stock and second a wide connection in the breeding fraternity. The use of only the best in the way of rams is necessary, however, in any case, and it goes without saying that the ram must be a pure-bred.

Although the high prices for wool have been responsible for attracting increased attention to the business of sheep raising within the past few years, it must not be forgotten that lamb and mutton has always formed an important part of the meat supply of this country and that the price of these commodities has increased almost equally with that of wool. The breeds of sheep best suited to the conditions of soil and climate in Canada are of what may be termed general purpose type and are therefore the sheep raiser here is in the happy position of being able to find a satisfactory market for the product of his industry in two directions. At the same time, it may be remarked that the demand for such grades of wool as can be produced to advantage has improved more considerably than has the demand for wool in general. However, wool of any grade, to be an asset of length consistent with the average for the grade, and flexible in the grease to obtain high prices, according to weight, must show reasonable freedom from an admixture of foreign matter. These requirements naturally indicate the importance of care in feeding and tending sheep of any breed that are intended to produce wool to advantage.

The grading of wool according to its fitness for certain lines of manu-

Don't Buy a Pig in a Bag.

When you send money to a mail order house, you "Buy a pig in a poke." You may not get what you send for, as you are always asked to make "A Second Choice." If goods are damaged in transit, there is trouble and at best, an irritating delay in getting matters straightened out.

If your local merchant asked you to pay for an article before you ever saw it, what would you say? Yet that is what the mail order house insists upon. Read the advertisements, see what you are buying, and spend your money at home.

Service

The business man, lawyer, poet, priest or Printer who earnestly tries to serve his neighbors will earn both money and real happiness; but the man who works for money alone gets that and nothing more.

The printers in the Review office work for both money and happiness—the quality of printing that brings happiness to our customers and just a little money to ourselves.

Do You Want Style?

There is no place in which the fashions are so promptly and correctly displayed, as in the advertising columns. The wholesale purveyors of fashionable goods keep their own buyers and artists in Paris, London, and Berlin, and pass on the information obtained to their customers, the merchants; who in turn keep their patrons properly informed through their advertisements. Even the latest fashion magazines are behind the advertising columns of the newspapers in displaying the most recent fads and fancies.

If you wish to keep abreast of the times, follow the advertisements.
